POULTRY

BLACKHEAD MOST COMMON DISEASE

Blackhead is one of the most common diseases of turkeys. It is caused by a microscopic parasite that affects especially the liver and ceca (blind pouches of the intestines) of birds from six weeks to four months of age. Older turkeys or chickens, however, are not immune to the trouble. Chickens may be a source of infection and not show signs of the disease.

The term "blackhead" is misleading, as any disease which causes a decrease in the oxygen supply of the blood may cause the head to become darkened in color. The characteristic symptoms are drowsiness, a tendency to lag behind the flock, loss of appetite, diarrhea and sulphur-colored droppings. The dark color of the head is common, but it is not always a reliable diagnostic symptom, as it may be the result of some other trouble. As the disease progresses the feathers become ruffled, the wings droop and general debility is noticed. Usually, several poults are stricken at once.

Treatment for blackhead is of little value. The hope is for prevention. Remove birds to new quarters and see that drinking and feeding vessels are thoroughly cleaned and disinfected. Sick birds should be killed and burned or buried deeply. A treatment which is advised by some is as follows: For each 20 birds give two teaspoonfuls of powdered ipecac mixed in a mash, twice a week until the poults are three months of age, then reduce the dosage one-half and give once each 10 days until the birds are ready for market.

Hens Relish Succulence in Potatoes and Apples

Raw potatoes and apples are relished by the hens and add succulence to the ration. However, a balanced dry mash should be used at the same time to encourage egg production. Melon leaves and vines are rather tough and not usually eaten by the hens when they have access to other green feed. A clover pasture or the succulent leaves of swiss chard will be much better.

Cull radishes and the leaves will be picked over by the hens. They like the roots but do not relish the tough leaves. Other grasses and green feed are better poultry feed. Much depends on the quality of the poultry range. Hens in small yards will seem to like certain tough leaves that they will never touch if more tender and succulent green feed is available.

Hints on Care of Eggs

Provide plenty of clean nests for the laying hens.

Gather eggs twice a day.

Keep the eggs in a cool, fairly dry place.

Keep out the cracked, dirty, small and very large eggs for home use.

Never wash eggs unless they are to be used immediately by local trade.

Market eggs frequently, at least once a week and preferably twice.

Know the preferences of your market and strive to meet them.

Grade your eggs for uniformity in size, shape and color.

Know the shipping requirements of express or railroad companies when you use their services.

Use only sound, strong, standard packages and pack the eggs properly.

Remember quality is essential for best prices.

If you are selling through a satisfactory agency with which you have established a reputation for high quality, be very sure that you have secured a better outlet before you make a change.

If you sell to local dealers, insist upon their buying eggs on a "loss off" or quality basis.—Farmers' Bulletin 1378, United States Department of Agriculture.

Poultry Notes

Dispose of all old birds that have stopped laying.

* * *

Do not sell early hatched pullets; they will mean winter eggs.

* * *

Hens and pullets should be put into a coop and if they do not lay ship them to the produce dealer.

* * *

Small, weak hens with long slim heads generally lack vigor and are usually short-time layers.

* * *

Soft-shelled eggs may be caused by condiments. Spices often lead to trouble.

* * *

W. R. Hinshaw, authority on poultry diseases at the Kansas Agricultural college, recommends culling of weak, inferior birds, strict sanitation and protection from undue exposure as the most promising means of controlling the epizootic among fowls.

BUNDESEN TIED BY INJUNCTION

KANE COUNTY JUDGE ISSUES WRIT

Hearing on Permanent Injunction To Be Heard in February

The following article on the T. B. situation appeared in the Chicago Tribune of Wednesday morning, dealing with the issuing of a temporary injunction Tuesday afternoon, restraining Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Chicago health commissioner, from demanding milk from tested cows and the dealers from intimidating the milk farmer swith contracts:

"If it is within my power I'm going to see that every drop of milk that all of my six children and the milk that other children drink in the city of Chicago is safe and pure if I have to go to jail to do it."

Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, health commissioner, made this statement last night when asked if he knew Circuit Judge William J. Fulton, Geneva, Ill., had granted a temporary injunction, restraining the commissioner and Chicago milk distributors from putting into effect a proposed order barring all milk from Chicago that comes from herds not tested for tuberculosis.

CommissionerB undesen said that up to that time no such order had been served on him.

The order, granted yesterday afternoon, will be served on Dr. Bundesen and more than twenty other defendants probably this morning. Copies of the order also will be mailed to 485 other Chicago milk dealers who are said to deliver seventy-five per cent of the milk in the city.

The injunction order is a move by one group of milk producers to oppose the plan of Chicago health officials and milk distributors to have all herds in the Chicago milk producing area tested for tuberculosis by next summer.

Frank A. McCarthy, an Elgin, Ill., attorney, and Kirkland, Patterson & Fleming of Chicago filed the bill, which was signed by Julius Schramer, William Hardt, Herman F. Heine, Robert Omann, Andrew Faber, F. C. Klahn, and Henry Wilkening, all milk producers.

The order restricts and enjoins Dr. Bundesen from "stating, representing, threatening, or ordering, by word of mouth or otherwise, or from causing the same to be done, that he individually, or as commissioner of health of thec ity of Chicago, will in any manner prevent the sale of milk in the city of Chicago which has not been produced under state and federal supervision, or which has not been produced by cattle tested by the so-called tuberculin test—"

The order also restricts the dealers and other defendants from requesting producers with whom they have contracts to sign agreements to have their herds tested.

Defendants, in addition to Dr. Bundesen, include the Bowman Dairy company, Sidney Wanzer & Sons, Inc., Liberty Dairy Products company, Logan Square Dairy, Murphy-Ward Dairy company, Borden Farm Products company, Wieland Dairy company, A. J. Olson company, City Sanitary Milk company, and the Model Dairy company.

Hearing on a permanent injunction will come up in February.

It is charged that Dr. Bundesen and the defendant dealers entered into a "conspiracy, agreement, and understanding, with the object and purpose of violating and evading" the Illinois law of 1911 and the Illinois tuberculin act, "for the purpose of injuring, damaging, and ruining the producers in the Chicago district."

entertainers of experience and attainments.

The bells used by the company were made by the same bell-founders who cast the great bells of Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral in London. The selections given are remarkable in their scope, ranging from such a powerful number as Rachmaninov's "Prelude in C Sharp Minor" to the liveliest of popular tunes. A descriptive number, "Sunday Morning in London," provides a unique vehicle for the music of the bells and is always a great favorite.

The program is an extraordinarily varied one. In addition to the music of the bells and the vocal selections, instrumental ensemble numbers employing violin, cello, banjo and piano, instrumental trios of cello, violin and banjo, violin solos, cello solos and humorous readings are splendidly interpreted.

Birds Protect Big Animals

E. P. James of Wembley, England writing to the London Mail about birds that protect animals, says that such birds are common in South Africa and adds: "But only one bird performs the duty for each animal. The crocodile has a bird which enters its mouth to clean the teeth of the brute. Another bird acts as sentry to the rhinoceros and warns it by screaming in the creature's ear of the approach of an enemy. I myself have witnessed these things in South Africa."—The Victorian.
