SLANDER AND LIBEL.

The Former Becomes the Latter If You Publish It.

If you ask a lawyer what kind of dispute gives rise to the largest number of contested cases in Britain, apart from ordinary claims for debts, he would probably say libel and slander. Do you know precisely what is the difference between these two things? Very few people seem to have a really clear idea.

Libel and slander have many things in common. Both mean the defamation of character, and both are apt to be very expensive luxuries, but while slander can only be by word of mouth, libel must be written or printed, drawn or painted, or in some similar fashion more permanently recorded. A statue might be a libel—we have seen some that undoubtedly were.

But there are many important distinctions between the two things. Suppose your neighbor has been slandering you, in the way that neighbors have, and you find you are getting the cold shoulder from your best friends. You want to bring an action against the slanderer. What can you prove? You must prove "special damage" in a slander case, i.e., that you have suffered some pecuniary loss which you can demonstrate to judge and jury. Frequently this is a very difficult matter. But, as with nearly every rule under the sun, this one has some far-reaching exceptions. They fall into four well-defined classes.

Suppose Brown's tongue has been running too fast about your business. You are a grocer, and he says that some of what you sell as sugar come off the beach; or you are a builder, and he goes about telling people that you are buying motor-cars out of the profits you make by putting shoddy material into jerry-built houses. This concerns your character in connection with your business, and so you need not prove "special damage." But if Brown merely told people that you rolled home drunk about three nights a week, and were always quarrelling with your unfortunate wife, this would not affect your capacity either as a builder or a grocer, and Brown would be quite safe unless you could prove special damage of some sort. It will easily be seen that it is often very doubtful exactly what affects a man in his business capacity.

Again, if anyone imputes immorality to a woman, there is no need for her to prove special damage (an Act of Parliament expressly provides for this). And slanders to the effect that a person suffers from certain diseases, or has been guilty of a criminal offence, are always, as the lawyer puts it, "actionable without proof of special damage."

Now libel in this respect is quite different. You never need prove special damage in a libel action. And, of course, you have another remedy. You can prosecute the offender. For slander you cannot—that is to say, for ordinary slander on a private person. Prosecution is possible, however, for seditious or blasphemous slanders.

Then there are differences between libel and slander from defendant's point of view. If you are sued for damages for libel or slander, it is a complete answer to show that what you said was true. But if you are prosecuted (for libel) you will not succeed in your defence unless you also show that you published the statement without malice and in the public interest. So you might go to prison for writing the truth, but not for speaking it.

Apple Pie With Whipped Cream.

Line a piet plate with good paste, using a very deep plate, building the crust high around the edge. Cut up sufficient green apples to fill it, heaping a little in the centre. Mix one-half cupful sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful grated nutmeg, one-eighth teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful lemon juice and a little grated lemon rind and sprinkle this over the apples. Dot with butter, arrange a few strips of pastry lattice fashion over the pie and bake forty to forty-five minutes in a moderate oven. Serve in the plate and with each portion, which should be served in a deep dish, pass the following sauce: One cupful heavy sweet cream whipped stiffly, sweetened with shaved maple sugar and flavored with grated nutmeg. Stir well before serving.

Domesticate Wild Cranes.

Found wild in the forest of Venezuela, the yakamiks, a kind of crane, are readily tamed, becoming valuable servants to the Indians, who domesticate them. Their power of flight is limited, and they seldom attempt any distance in the air. Not only are they intrusted with the care of the flocks, herds and poultry, but they are left as sole guardians of the babies. Certain species of the tribe found in Brazil farther to the south are protected by law because of their recognized value as snake killers.

A Card Trick.

Take an ordinary visiting card and bend it at the ends to make it look like a little stool. Now place it on the table and invite your friends to blow it over. This may seem easy, but they may try in vain to do it. It can be accomplished, however, by blowing sharply on the table itself, at some distance in front of the card, stirring air under it which upsets it.

Swindled.

Collector—H'm, fairly good specimen. I'll give you £50 for it.

Curio Dealer—No, sir. I've sold that for 100 guineas.

Collector—A hundred! Good heavens, you've been swindled. It's worth twice as much!—London Punch.

Opportunity.

Sometim one succeeds by embracing the other fellow's opportunity.

LOST AT SEA.

Amazing Mysteries and Weird Disappearances on the Ocean.

If the ocean has its mysteries, so has the ship that rides it, and which furnishes the more baffling puzzles would be difficult to determine.

Ships leave ports and are never seen nor heard of again, and—in some respects more inexplicable still—passengers board vessels and suddenly forever vanish from human ken.

The strange disappearance of Dr. Diesel, the famous inventor, is a case in point which must be fresh in everybody's mind.

One day recently, it will be remembered, Dr. Diesel left Antwerp on board one of the Great Eastern Railway Company's steamers for Harwich, whence he proposed journeying to London to keep an important business engagement. On board the steamer the doctor appeared to be in the best of health and spirits, and at 10 p.m. retired to his cabin for the night.

Next morning he was nowhere to be found, and the mystery of his disappearance remains still unsolved.

Again, not many months ago, the steamship Baldor, on arrival in the Firth of Forth from Gothenburg, had a queer story to unfold through the mouth of her skipper.

It concerned the uncanny disappearance of a second-class lady passenger. The last that was seen of her was late at night, when one of the stewardesses noticed her pacing the deck. The vessel was then in the North Sea.

Afterwards this passenger's berth was found to be unoccupied, and, not only the lady, but her baggage, consisting of a bag, had vanished. Where and how nobody knows.

Could anything be more baffling than the following? It occurred on board a steamer between Leith and Orkney. Among the passengers were two sisters, who were traveling to attend the funeral of a third sister.

When off Bell Lighthouse one of the ladies retired to her bunk, the other, as the night was fine, preferring to remain a little longer on deck. That was the last that was seen of her.

Another amazing incident was that reported by the captain of a Dutch steamer, the Van Noort, on his arrival at Singapore. The parties immediately concerned were three sisters of German nationality, who were passengers aboard, and had been touring in Java.

After having spent the evening on deck, chatting and reading, they were seen one night going to their cabin about ten o'clock. Next morning the attendant could get no answer to his knocks at the cabin door, and, on an entry being made, the room was found to be empty.

On the table was a note addressed to the captain, which briefly stated that he was to have their baggage, and on a desk there was a bottle containing a few drops of chloroform. From this it was conjectured that the three sisters had each taken chloroform, and then climbed through the porthole into the sea!

A Stumper.

A club of eccentric young men had for one of their rules that on Tuesday evenings any man who asked a question in the clubrooms which he was unable to answer himself, should pay a fine of $10.

One evening McLoughlin asked the following:

"Why doesn't a ground squirrel leave any dirt around the top of his hole when he digs it?"

After some deliberation McLoughlin was called upon to answer his own question. "That's easy," said he; "the squirrel starts at the bottom and digs up."

"All very nice," suggested a member, "but how does he get to the bottom?"

"Well," answered McLoughlin, "that's your question."

Period of Most Intellectual Vigor.

Recent medical statistics as to the age when man has the most intellectual vigor give interesting results. It is from forty to fifty-six that the most brilliant things have been accomplished by the majority of humans.

Chemists and physicians have made brilliant discoveries at forty. Poets have accomplished masterpieces at forty-four, and novelists two years later. Famous warriors average forty-seven; musicians are most brilliant at forty-eight and actors at the same age. Moralists are greatest at fifty-one, politicians at fifty-three, humorists at fifty-six, thus demonstrating that the last thing one learns is how to amuse one's fellows.

The Ten Greatest Inventions.

"What are the ten greatest inventions of our time?" asked a scientific journal recently. It awarded the prize to the contestant sending this list. The electric furnace, the steam turbine, the gasoline automobile, the moving pictures, the aeroplane, wireless telegraphy, the cyanide process, the induction motor, the linotype, the electric welding process. And all this was accomplished in a quarter century. Power asks, Can you name off hand seven of the inventors?

Advice to His Doctor.

M. de Calonne, one of the last Ministers of Finance of Louis XVI., in his last illness asked for a pencil and wrote down the following words for the benefit of the doctor who attended him: "Docteur, vous m'avez assassine! Si vous etes un honnete homme, renoncez a la medicine pour jamais" (Doctor, you have murdered me. If you are an honest man, give up the practice of medicine forever).

John Bunyan.

Among the great reformers of the world the only red-headed one is said to have been John Bunyan.

Truth.

Some people think truth, like rubber, will go farther if stretched.

More Hydro-Electric Railway

Guelph, March 13.—Alderman Hannigan, Chairman, will call a meeting of the Railways and Manufactures Committee to consider the question of a Hydro power railway to Hillsburg, Erin and Orangeville. Between this territory and Guelph there was formerly a very close connection, but the Credit Valley branch of the C. P. R. diverted traffic to Toronto. The line now suggested was part of the People's Railway proposals, and is so important that the wonder is that it was not taken up in connection with the Hydro power line from Hespeler to the Georgian Bay. Surveyors are in this district, and their services will likely be utilized in running this line. It is understood they are at present running two lines to Arthur and the Georgian Bay.

Shelburne council is also asking for a survey from Grand Valley to Shelburne, Hornings Mills and Singhampton to Collingwood.

Joseph Bunson, a young man who resides near Kilsyth, is in Owen Sound Hospital after undergoing the painful operation of having his eye removed. On Thursday of last week Bunson was splittling cord-wood when a piece of wood struck him in the eye, penetrating about three quarters of an inch into the eye ball. The doctor in attendance expects to be able to save the sight of the other eye of the unfortunate man.—Tara Leader.

SLEPT 32 YEARS.

Swedish Woman In Trance From Fourteenth Year Until Forty-Sixth.

There are many cases on record of people remaining in a sleeplike trance for several years, these trances being often caused from injuries to the head, but no one has had so long a sleep as a woman named Caroline Allison, who lives in the little island of Okuo, off the coast of Sweden.

The sleeper of Okuo was born in 1861; she was a perfectly normal child, and for the first fourteen years of her life she was strong and healthy. She did not go to work till just before her 14th birthday. One day she came home complaining of toothache, and went to bed. Soon afterwards she fell into a deep trance, which lasted from 1875 until 1907, a period of 32 years.

While in this state she did not seem to see or hear, nor did she show any trace of feeling, for though her arms were pricked with pins, needles, and other sharp instrument she was not once observed to wince. Only once or twice did she seem to wake from her lethargy. On one occasion, in response to a cry from her mother, she moved her lips as if to try and speak. When her mother died Caroline must have been conscious of the fact, for she burst into tears, though there was no other change in her condition. Two years later, when her brother was drowned, she also had a fit of weeping. For thirty years and more her only nourishment consisted of two cupfuls of milk a day.

After the death of her brother she was left to the care of a housekeeper, and then gradual signs of awakening intelligence began to dawn. Once she was left alone for several hours with food near her, and the food was seen to have gradually disappeared. There was no doubt that her trance had been broken. A few months later she regained consciousness, asking for her mother. She did not recognize her brothers at all, for she only remembered them as tiny boys. Gradually she regained possession of her faculties, until, at the age of 46, she had completely recovered from her trance, being in perfect health and well and hearty in every way.

She only remembers her early life, but nothing that happened during her long illness.

The Dignity of the Hammer.

"By hammer and hand all arts do stand," was the ancient motto of mechanics' guilds or associations.

In the hammer lies the wealth of a nation. Its merry clink points out the abode of industry and labor. By it are alike forged the glittering sword of contention and the dusty plowshare of agriculture; the ponderous engines that almost shake the world and the tiny needle which unites alike the costly silks and satins of a queen and the rough homespun of the laborer.

Not a house is built, not a ship floats, not a carriage rolls, not a wheel spins, not an engine thunders, not a press speaks, not a bugle peals, not a spade delves, nor a banner floats without having endured the blows of the hammer. The hammer teaches us that great ends and large results can be accomplished only by good, hard, vigorous blows; that, if we would attain usefulness and reach the full perfection of what we are capable of becoming, we must not shrink from the hardships, buffetings and hard knocks of life, but early learn to cultivate the power of patient endurance.

HARDWARE!

Listen: Life insurance for your house.

A tree often lives several hundred years. Nature has protected the wood by covering it with bark to shield it from the elements.

When trees are sawed into lumber, Nature's protection is lost. Therefore the wood used in your house must be protected to insure it against the weather and wear.

S. W. P. is a good life insurance policy on your house. It protects against decay—pays for itself over and over again in the repairs it saves. It adds value and beauty to your home, as well as long life to the wood.

Sherwin Williams' paint is genuine white lead, oxide of zinc purest colors, and linseed oil—ground to extreme fineness by powerful machinery—a combination of which produces a paint that is greatest in hiding, covering and wearing qualities, and makes it the cheapest paint to use, as well as the most satisfactory. Ask for color cards or any information or suggestions. Free for the asking.
