SWP

SWP means Sherwin-Williams Paint (Prepared). This is the best paint for you to use because it is made of pure materials—pure lead, pure zinc, pure Linseed Oil, and pure coloring pigments which are thoroughly mixed and ground in scientific proportions by powerful machinery.

It is better than the old fashioned hand-mixed paint because the materials are put together according to correct chemical formulae which have been tested out in a practical way. • Its fine grinding makes it cover nearly 50% more surface than hand-mixed paint.

SWP is an economical paint because it will cover the greatest amount of surface, wear longest, and look best.—Ask us for color cards.

FORTIFICATIONS OF QUEBEC.

Were Citadel Now Stands Was Formerly a Bald Rock.

In his masterly sketch of Quebec and its origin in 1603 Parkman touches on what for the visitor today—fifty years since he wrote—is still the most striking feature of the situation of both Montreal and Quebec; namely, that these cities, one of them at least the very glass of modern progress, seem to stand in a romantic and beautiful setting of primeval forests and rocky uplands. Parkman says:

"Champlain spread his sails, and again held his course up the St. Lawrence. Far to the south, in sun and shadow, slumbered the woody mountains whence fell the countless springs of the St. John, behind tenantless shores, now white with glimmering villages—La Chenaie, Granville, Kamouraska, St. Roche, St. Jean, Vincelot, Berthier. But on the north the jealous wilderness still asserts its sway, crowding to the river's verge its walls, domes and towers of granite; and to this hour its solitude is scarcely broken.

"Above the point of the Island of Orleans, a constriction of the vast channel narrows it to less than a mile, with the green heights of Point Levis on one side, and on the other the cliffs of Quebec. Here, a small stream, the St. Charles, enters the St. Lawrence, and in the angle betwixt them rises the promontory, on two sides a natural fortress. Between the cliffs and the river lay a strand covered with walnuts and other trees. From this strand, by a rough passage gullied downward from the place where Prescott Gate now (1865) guards the way, one might climb the heights to the broken plateau above, now burdened with its ponderous load of churches, convents, dwellings, ramparts, and batteries. Thence by a gradual ascent, the rock sloped upward to its highest summit, Cape Diamond, looking down on the St. Lawrence from a height of three hundred and fifty feet. Here the citadel now stands; then the sun fell on the bald rock, decked here and there with mosses and lichens. Two centuries and a half have quickened the solitude with swarming life, covered the deep bosom of the river with barge and steamer and gliding sail, and reared cities and villages on the site of forests; but nothing can destroy the surpassing grandeur of the scene."

The Colonel and the Recruit.

A prominent business man of King street west, Toronto, tells how the financial stringency has unavoidably urged curtailments in several departments in his factory. He even had to call in certain men and explain how they must be laid off until times got better. One—a big, husky hand, whose skill in his line was such that he did not want to lose him—was offered other work at slightly reduced money if he would stay till business got better again. The business man is also a colonel on the retired list. He had been summoned by the Militia Department to report at Valcartier to assist in the preparations for receiving the first contingent. He was to leave that night, but he made time to have a regular heart-to-heart talk with the valued employe referred to. But he says that pretty near all his private business worries were forgotten in the turmoil of the bustling job at Valcartier. The troop trains kept pouring into camp from all over Canada, and invariably just before all their efforts could manage to perfect reception arrangements. "I remember that we had a breathing-spell just before the 48th Highlanders arrived, and with several other officers I was awaiting Col. Currie's appearance on the scene. The pipers had passed us on the swing, and the brave boys in kilts themselves, and we officers were moving to headquarters again, when to my astonishment (and that of the staff with me) I heard: "Hello, Mr. ——, how's things?" Perched aloft on top of a supply wagon there was my big, jolly, husky chap from Toronto that I had been so anxious to keep on. I thought I should sink through the huckleberry bushes. "Hello, Mr. ——," it sounded so familiar a greeting, and yet so unfamiliar down here in the shadow of the war cloud.

Walkerton

Billy Hough, aged 40, who absconded from the House of Refuge at Walkerton and was arrested by the Chief of Police at Owen Sound, stated that his mother wouldn't keep him when arraigned on a vagrancy charge in the Owen Sound Police Court the other day. He was committed to the cells and will likely be transferred to the Guelph Prison Farm.

Mr. David Karges, proprietor of the moving picture show here, was fined $20 and costs, amounting in all to $23.75, by Magistrate Tolton on Saturday last for employing an unlicensed operator to run his machine. Herbie Hauck, the operator, was also up for engaging in such work without a license, and although he was liable for a similar fine, the court let him off with a warning.

Nora Ernst, the 18 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Ernst, was sentenced by Magistrate James Tolton and Robt. Richardson here on Saturday afternoon, to two years less one month, in the Mercer Reformatory at Toronto. Her father, who was the chief witness against her at the trial, claimed that she had become unmanageable at home, and would go out and come in when she liked, often remaining out until a very late hour of the night. He thought, for his daughter's own good, that she ought to be put under some restraint, and the court acquiesced in this view by sentencing her to the Reformatory.

While repairing shoes on Saturday night, Mike Schefter noticed that the lamp by his side was about to explode, and grabbing it he rushed from his shop to the street and while casting it forth it blew up with a bang like a German bomb. Although the glass flew like shrapnel in all directions, Mike came through the ordeal unhurt, though all the curl is said to have been taken out of his hair when it went up straight. It was a close call from a serious fire, and as Mike occupies an attached store, his neighbors are all glad that he had the courage to grab the lamp and not fiddle around like Nero while Rome burned.

A man named Collins, who left England about four months ago, and came to this country to escape enlisting for the front, was befriended by Robert Lymberry near town, who took the wanderer in and put him up for a week. After his departure, Lymberry noticed that his silver watch, which had been hanging on the wall, had been removed, and a worthless timepiece without hands had been hung in its place. Suspecting his late guest, Lymberry notified Chief Ferguson, and found that Collins had just been placed by Immigration Officer Richardson on the farm of his son, Mr. John Richardson, in Brant. In company with the immigration Officer, Lymberry started out after the man and found him reclining in ease in a corner of a fence on the Richardson farm, the boys of the works having sent him out to repair the fence. On being accused of the theft, Collins, after some hedging, finally confessed to having stolen his late benefactor's watch, and drawing it from his clothes delivered it up to its rightful owner again. The thief was then brought into town and handed over to Chief Ferguson on Tuesday night, but the officer not caring to have the man sentenced and quartered for a spell on the country, gave him a few minutes to get out of town, which he did without delay. Although only nineteen years of age this gent would seem to have already qualified as a smooth, worthless guy.
