Petun Indians Found

What is considered one of the most interesting and remarkable discoveries made in connection with the early Indian races of Ontario has just been announced by the archaeological department of the province and has attracted attention all over the country.

Briefly, it is that there has been found in Oklahoma, under the protection of the United States government, what is believed to be the last remnant of the famous Petun, or Tobacco nation, which once roamed the whole country and today forms the prosperous counties of western Ontario.

The disappearance of this tribe has always been one of the great mysteries in connection with the early history in the country. It is believed the Petuns were really the oldest tribe of Indians in Canada and that from them sprang the Hurons, the Algonquins and those other great tribes which are famous in the history.

By 1616, when Champlain visited them they were settled in the country that now forms Grey county and the Bruce peninsula. They had brought their tobacco with them and raised it despite the comparatively short summer in that northern part of the province.

When the Iroquois made their great raids in the middle of the seventeenth century, the Petuns knew their doom was sealed, and they then began a wandering that lasted for fifty years and that reduced them to a shadow of their former greatness.

Joined by a remnant of Hurons they first went to Mackinac. From there they were driven by the Iroquois to Green Bay, Wis., where the Jesuit missionaries gave them shelter at the mission of St. Michael. From there they went to the lands around Lake Pepin, intruding on the Sioux hunting grounds and being again forced to find shelter at Chegoimegan, Wis.

In time they returned to Mackinac and a band of them sailed to Manitoulin Island, rejoining in a few months the Mackinac party. Leaving Mackinac they descended to Detroit, being broken into scattered bands at Sandwich, Niagara and other places. Finally the tribe as a body settled at Sandusky, from which place they were removed by the United States government to the Kansas Reservation and finally to the Indian Territory now the state of Oklahoma. There, with the remnants of other tribes, they have apparently found a last resting place.

It must not be thought that all these wanderings were known as they occurred. The tracing out of the peregrinations of this once powerful body of Indians has occupied the time of many investigators who, patching their discoveries together, have finally completed the chain of the tribe's wanderings. In this work probably the leading spirit has been the Rev. Arthur Jones, the archivist of the Jesuits of Montreal, whose life has been devoted to delving in the dark past of Canadian history and whose contributions to the record of these early times have been of the most valuable character.

What is perhaps one of the most interesting details which have been brought to light by the Rev. Mr. Jones in connection with the Petun tribe is that it is of South American origin. The word Petun is of Tepi origin and is found in practically all the dialects of the native tribes of Brazil. The word, meaning tobacco, was retained through all the wanderings of the tribe that finally brought it to the shores of Georgian Bay, thousands of miles distant. They not only brought the name with them but the plant as well.

Among the Petuns, as among the other Huron-Iroquois tribes, tobacco had a sacred character and was used in all their ceremonial rites and in the opening treaties among themselvies or with other nations. It was also smoked by them in the curing of various diseases; it was smoked to propitiate the Manitous and was also used to ward off bad luck or invite good luck. The plant when gathered by the Petuns for home consumption was carefully dried, was then broken into small pieces or pulverized and was preserved in deer skin pouches.

It is the intention of the Ontario government to send an investigator to Oklahoma, who will learn all he can from the survivors of the tribe as to their language their folk lore and whatever may have been preserved in tradition as to their origin and history.

How To Make a Ford

There was an old man who had a wooden leg;
He had no money, and he just couldn't beg;
But he had a piece of pipe and a 12 inch board
And he said, "By golly, I'll build me a Ford."
So he took a gallon of gas and a sprinkle of oil
And a piece of rusty wire to make him a coil;
Four big spools and an old tin can.
He hammered them together and the blamed thing ran.

The Christian Island Indians have signed a surrender of both Hope and Beckwith Islands to the Dominion government. The property together with the timber is to be sold and the minimum price is to be $50,000. The money received is to be used and invested in paying the annuities to the Indians. There is a large amount of valuable hardwood timber on both Islands.

Dr. Jas. W. Robertson, of Ottawa, in concluding an earnest Red Cross Society address recently said: "Christian civilization demands that a man must be at present in one of four places: The firing line for the young man for the honor of his country; the saving line to help save life as the Red Cross Society is doing; the factory line to manufacture necessities, and the farming line to provide food for those who are struggling and working."
