CLEAN YOUR CELLARS.

If not already done, thoroughly purge this subteranean story of your house. Every decayed onion, cabbage stump, potato-vine or tuber, turnip, parsnip, carrot, and all the dirt they have made, all straw and rubbish, rake them up and out with them. The cellar is no place for them at any time of the year. If you still retain a few potatoes for table use, let them be picked over and all the decayed ones removed. One of the best housewives of our acquaintance, greeted us not long since with an invitation to come and see her cellar. "I have swept down every cobweb, whitewashed the walls, swept up the floor, and sowed it with salt." Decayed vegetable matter is a fertile cause of disease, and there is enough of it out of doors in this country, without heaping it up in the cellar for the special reason, it would seem, of breeding fevers. Whitewash the walls, for lime purifies as well as beautifies. Rake down the cobwebs they are the infallible marks of a slattern. Salt destroys worms, &c. If your cellar is very dry and sandy you may use salt without detriment; but if too damp it will make matters worse.

HOW TO SECURE GOOD COFFEE.

I suppose every one has something to say upon the subject of coffee, but perhaps my mite of information may be acceptable. Having lived much in France, where coffee is almost the national beverage, I have observed that attention is paid to several points that are very lightly regarded in England. We are generally satisfied with whatever the grocer chooses to send us in the way of coffee, even the ready ground mixture, and any defect in flavour is attributed to errors in making the coffee. Machines without end are invented for coffee-making, some of the most remarkable shapes and classical names are not unfrequently combining a "startling effect" with their other qualities, in case the safety-valve is mismanaged. But the real secret of good coffee lies in the choosing and roasting the grain; all the rest is mechanical. The coffee must be of different qualities—Berbice, Plantation, Martinique, Mocha, &c.—and not of one sort only. Secondly these different sorts must be roasted separately as one will require much more time than another, and if roasted together one would be underdone while the other was burnt. The French roast their coffee every morning in a little cylinder turned by hand over a charcoal fire, and all the husks are carefully blown away before grinding. It should be ground while hot, and immediately made into coffee. I do not think an egg is required to make good coffee. When I was a fag at Winchester I made it to the satisfaction of my master; and all we used to clear it was a small piece of dried soleskin. In other respects the method recommended by Mocha is correct, and there is no need of percolators, or incubators, or hydraulics, or hydrostatics, to make a good cup of coffee. But instead of pouring out one teacupful, after it was put into the biggin, our fashion was to pour it backwards and forwards seven times. A little bit of stick was put into the coffee-pot to prevent it boiling over, and when it begun to boil fast a cup of cold water was thrown in, and after standing a little it was as clear as amber.

THE PROFESSION OF WOMEN.

Harper's Magazine has a paper on the profession of women, which is said to be house-keeping, and which it is declared is thoroughly dishonored. We quote the proofs of this statement:—

The delicate constitution and failing health of young girls, the sickness and sufferings of mothers and house-keepers, the miserable quality of domestic service, the stinted wages of seamstresses, the despair of thousands who vainly strive for an honest living, and the awful increase of those who live by vice, are more and more pressed on public attention.

What is the cause of this? The cause is, that woman is not trained for her profession, while that profession is socially disgraced.

Women are not trained to be housekeepers, nor to be wives, nor to be mothers, nor to be the nurses of young children, nor to be the nurses of the sick, nor to be seamstresses, nor to be domestics.

And yet what trade or profession involves more difficult and complicated than that of a housekeeper.

When the parents are poor, the daughters are forced into considerable practical training for future duties, though many a mother toils to the loss of her health that her daughters may have all their time for study and school.

In the more wealthy classes, the young girl is subject to a constant stimulus of the brain, involving certain debility of nerves and muscles. While woman's proper business is disgraced and avoided, all the excitements of praise, honour, competition, and emolument, are given to book-learning and accomplishments. The little girl who used to be rewarded at school for sewing neatly, and praised when she made a whole shirt for her father, now is rewarded and praised only for geography, grammar, and arithmetic. The young woman in the next higher school goes on to geometry, algebra, and Latin, and winds up, if able to afford it, with French, music, and drawing. Twenty other branches are added to these, not one of them including any practical training for any one of woman's distinctive duties.

The result is, that in the wealthy classes a woman no more thinks of earning her living in her true and proper profession than her brothers do of securing theirs by burglary or piracy.

This feeling in the more wealthy classes, descends to those less favored in fortune.

THE FIRST SPREE.

Niver vos drunk but vunce in the whole corse o' my life; niver means to be agin. The street seem'd to be wery steep, and I lifted my leg at ewery step as I vos gittin up stairs; several cart veels vos makin' convolutions in my brain, at one time I fancied my head vos a large carvin' and turnin' establishment, the lathes of vitch I vos keepin' in motion vith my feet. I could'nt conceiv vot vos the reason the town vos turn'd into sich an enormous high hill; and vot made it vorser vos that it seemed all the time growin high er, and threatenin' to pitch over on me. Stop, stop, tho't I, and I'll head this old hill yet or at least it shan't head me; so I turn'd to go round, and go to the bottom, and hang me if the town didn't turn round with me, headin me all the time, and presentin' the high bluff right in front on me. Well, sure enough, the ground flew up and struck me in the forehead; and as soon as the stars cleared away I commenced climbin' up with my hands and knees. The next thing I saw vos a big brick house comin' full split round the corner, and I b'lieve it went right over me, but I dont remember any more.—Old Newspaper.

WHICH WAS WHICH.

I don't know what they call those men who inspect the lunatic asylums—whether commissioners, inspectors, lunatick officers, or what; but I heard a good story about one the other day. He, the Government inspector, (let us say Government inspector or I shall not be able to get on), went down to a lunatick asylum to inspect, report, or whatever may be the term of it. He was a very tall fellow, with sandy whiskers, this official. He saw the medical superintendent, and said:—I don't wish to go over the asylum in the usual way, but to mingle with the patients as if I were a—an officer, a surgeon, or even one of themselves. By so doing I shall be better enabled to judge of their intellectual state, and of their progress in the direction of—sanity." "With pleasure," said the doctor, "it is Saturday, and we usually have a dance on Saturday night. If you go into the ball room, as we call it, you will see rhem talking and dancing without reserve." "Would it be objectionable if I—a—danced with them?" "Not at all," was the reply. The official walked into the ball-room, and selecting the prettiest girl he saw for a partner, was soon keeping up a very animated conversation with her. In the course of the evening, he said to the doctor—"Do you know that that girl in the white dress, with blue spots, is a very curious case? I've been talking to her, and I cannot, for the life and soul of me, discover in what direction her mental malady lies. Of course, I saw at once she was mad—saw it in the odd look of her eyes. She kept looking at me so oddly. I asked her if she did not think she was the Queen of England, or whether she had not been robbed of a large fortune by the Volunteer movement, or jilted by the Prince of Wales; and tried to find out the cause of her lunacy; but I couldn't—she was too artful." "Very like," answered the doctor; "you see, she is not a patient; she is one of the housemaids, and as sane as you are!" Meantime, the pretty housemaid went to all her fellow-servants and said, "Have you seen the new patient? He's been dancing with me. A fine tall man, and beautiful whiskers; but as mad as a March hare. He asked me if I wasn't the Queen of England; if a Volunteer hadn't robbed me of a large fortune; and whether the Prince of Wales did not want to marry me. He is mad. Isn't it a pity—such a fine young man?"—Illustrated Times.

No man can avoid his own company; so he had better make it as good a one as possible.

Many husbands think that the range of a woman's duties is no wider than the range of the kitchen.

Sydney Smith wrote to a friend—"I have seven or eight complaints; but in other respects I am perfectly well."

Why is a husband like a Mississippi gunboat? Because he never knows when he may get a blowing up.

We should give as we would receive, cheerfully, quickly, and without hesitation; for there is no grace in a benefit that sticks in the fingers.

The local American papers state that a teacher in Virginia, giving lessons in geography, asked a boy, "What state do you live in?" The urchin hit the fact when he bawled out, "A state of sin and misery."
