MR. PHIPPS "FORESTRY REPORT."

Preservation of Existing Portions of Forest.

But one of these small forests, to which cattle are allowed free entrance, will be found in a very different state. Unless they are few in number compared with the size of the forest, or that they have access to such rich pasturage as to deprive them of the inclination to destroy the young trees, they will certainly kill the undergrowth, unless it be evergreen, which is seldom the case. (Here it may be remarked that a hardwood forest might be maintained in good condition where cattle must be allowed, by encouraging or even planting an evergreen undergrowth—pine, hemlock and cedar; these would protect the soil and the larger trees, which would then grow to maturity, and your hardwood forest would in time become an evergreen glade.) But where the undergrowth is deciduous, and cattle destroy it, no young trees can rise, the forest becomes thin, the sun beats on the bark of the larger trees, (a thing the forest tree has not the bark to bear; the field tree bark is dense; that of the shaded forest tree tender); the young trees gone, wind and sun dry the ground, it becomes carpeted with grass, the great trees begin to die at the top, the decay of the older forest is only a question of time and there will be no young one to replace it.

In many of these reservations, there is yet much good timber, and if care were taken there might be a perpetual succession of such—even now, as remarked, there is much good red and white beech, black and white ash, elm, cherry, oak, maple, and many another tree. How valuable these are likely soon to become, the statements in other pages from practical men, engaged in the use of these woods, inform us. What I should like therefore to suggest is, that where any reasonable amount of forest, say ten or twenty acres, exists on a farm, it is great waste to allow cattle its complete range. Let them have a few acres for shade, but for the rest, if left to grow timber—above all, if assisted to grow timber, it may, in a few years yield without labour, a return more valuable than any other portion of the farm.

WALKS AND TALKS ON THE FARM.

I have not had a single case of goitre in lambs for many years. I do not know that there is any cure for it. I am inclined to think it is the result largely of general debility, caused in many cases by keeping the sheep in close, damp cellars or barns. A French book on sheep says it is caused by the "humidity of the habitations." In the management of sheep there is no one point of greater importance than fresh air, and a dry place to lie down. Too much damp straw under foot is specially objectionable. Sheep like a little clean straw scattered on the shed every day. Stir up the soiled bedding and then spread evenly half an inch or so of fresh straw on top. The sheep will lie down and you will see how much they enjoy it. Lambing time, if everything goes well, is of special interest and pleasure, but if things go wrong the shepherd will need all his patience and experience. I have been through it all, and I wish I could drop a hint that would be useful, but hardly know what to say. There is one thing to be specially guarded against, and that is impatience. In valuable flocks of sheep, of course the owner or shepherd will rarely let one, two or three hours go past without seeing that his attendance is not required. He will want to be on hand, but as a rule the less he does, except at a critical moment, the better. Forethought, due preparation, constant watchfulness, and a masterly inactivity, combined with intelligent promptness, are the desirable requisites. We frequently "slop" our ewes after lambing, just as we do cows. Bran and oat-meal, or oil-cake meal, makes an excellent slop, say half and half, giving from one to two pounds of the mixture to each sheep per day, according to the size of the ewe. Of course, if you have plenty of roots, slops are not needed, but the hard oats, or corn, or oil-cake should not be omitted. Farmers should raise more roots for their live stock. All hoed crops aid in improving the condition of the land.—JOSEPH HARRIS in American Agriculturist for March.

Cholera Preventative.

In order to withstand Cholera and such like epidemics a perfect purity of blood, and the proper action of the proper action of the stomach are required. To insure that end, in the cheapest, most available and complete manner, use McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, and Impure Blood. There is no purer, safer or more reliable remedy in existence for Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, etc. Ask your neighbor or any person who used it. Sold at Richardson's Drug Store. Trial bottle given free.

—The 31st (Grey) battalion has offered to go to the North-West and help to thresh Reil and his following. Our volunteers are a sturdy lot of fellows and would, we doubt not, acquit themselves nobly. A Toronto merchant offered a prize to the soldier who would succeed in bringing him Riel's scalp. Not to be behindhand, the Editor of this paper offers a copy of THE ADVANCE for twenty years, sent regularly to any address postage prepaid—to the loyal volunteer who will send hin free of duty a lock of rebel Riel's hair!

THE QUESTION OF THE DAY.—"What is good for a Cold?" is a question often asked, but seldom satisfactorily answered. We can answer to the satisfaction of all, if they will follow our advice and try Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, a safe, pleasant and certain throat and lung healer. Sold by all druggists.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefited, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favourable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. H. A. Dixon & Son, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1882.
