NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Bismark says he will hold office until the day of his death.

—A Western minister charges $1 extra for kissing the bride.

—Dr. Cumming, the once well-known London preacher, is now out of his mind.

—Mrs. Langtry, the Jersey lily, is said to be so poor that she has to work for a living.

—It is confidently asserted that there will be no peach crop on the Delaware peninsula this year.

—Bismarck intends increasing the German silver coinage by fifteen million marks.

—A Milwaukee judge has ruled that the anti-treating law is inoperative on account of an error in the text.

—The new czar rises early, walks, breakfasts with his family, and amuses the children after dinner.

—Hobart Pasha has been ordered to prepare the water defences in the Dardanelles against vessels creeping in at night.

—Two $12,000 elephants belonging to Forepaugh have just died in Baltimore from colds contracted during the St. Patrick's day parade.

—Only ten per cent. of the population of Italy are to-day beggars, the percentage having greatly decreased during the last quarter of a century.

—Late accounts from the Ottawa valley say that the wheat has not been damaged by the late severe frost to the extent anticipated.

—Canadian horses are becoming more in demand in the States than ever. An order has been received from New York to purchase eighty horses for shipment to that city.

—The prince of Naples, crown prince of Italy, is so sickly and puny that it is feared he will never ascend the throne of his fathers. His father and mother were double first-cousins.

—A Colorado man amused himself for a little while by throwing his revolver into the air and catching it. A local paper says that it slipped and went off, and he died in two minutes.

—The directors of the Stratford and Huron railway are taking active steps to complete their railway to Wiarton this fall. Over 200 cars of steel rails have already arrived, and the track-layers are to commence this week.

—Jay Gould's cheque for $2,000,000 on the Fourth National Bank of New York city, which was written on a piece of letter paper, recently passed safely through the post and was duly honoured.

—Ten cowskinned in a row in a stable at Pittsville, Wis., with their heads fastened in the usual way between stanchions. The floor gave way in the night, and in the morning they were found hanging by their necks.

—The three houses Vanderbilt building for himself and his three daughters, on Fifth Avenue, will cost upwards of $500,000 for the privilege. The lots are 25 feet wide and 100 feet deep, and costing over $100,000 each.

—A fierce dog ran after Thomas Grazier, a bright little eleven-year-old son of San Antonio, and when he reached the horror-stricken boy he fell dead at his feet, the dog absolutely frightened to death.

—What has become of the celebrated Tichborne trial? It was brought to a close at Napanee on Thursday evening, and acquitted Arthur Orton of murdering his husband Edward Navin.

—Interviews with farmers from all parts of the Ottawa valley show that the fall wheat crop has not been injured to any great extent by the severe winter weather. The area sown in the Ottawa valley this season is unusually large.

—Wingham purchased a fire engine in Scotland. The corporation of that city thought it was too cheap and therefore added five per cent. duty. Wingham can now ring the bell as an alarm but they had to pay the Dominion government $94 for the privilege.

—Jennie Hyland was divorced from Mark Hyland at Des Moines on September, because he abused her, and he pleaded his cause with such earnestness that she immediately married him. Now, for conjugal abuse, she seeks another divorce.

—An aged negro was the other day showing the scars of the wounds inflicted by lash when he was a slave. "What a picture," exclaimed a sympathizer, looking on. "Yes," responded the negro old brother, "that's the work of my masters."

—At Hazleton, Ind., two women whose actions outraged the feelings of the respectable portion of the community, were on Friday night captured by a number of masked men and given a coat of tar and feathers. The women have disappeared.

—A few days ago the youngson of Mr. A. H. Gould, school teacher of Hastings, went into the garden to get some artichokes. Soon after he was found in convulsions and died shortly after. It is supposed that he was poisoned by eating wild parsnip. Another son is affected is recovering.

—Terrible accounts are being received from St. Petersburg about the execution of the Nihilists. It is said that the wolf had the rope adjusted four times, and that his prolonged torture was most sickening and cruel. The crowd cried out that the Cossacks should use their lances to do the work of the hangman.

—An agnostic, says the Sun, is a man who doesn't know whether there is a God or not; doesn't know whether he has a soul or not; doesn't know whether there is a future life or not; and doesn't believe that anyone else does know any more about these matters than he does, and thinks it a waste of time to find out.

—Dr. Wild, the eccentric preacher of Bond street Congregational church, Toronto, preached a sermon Sunday week on the fate of Russia and England. He said the conflict between them would be that of a seven days' war, England, as typical of good, triumphing. He founds his prophecy upon Ezekiel 38th and 39th chapters.

—During the temporary absence of a Quebec tradesman from his shop the other day, a customer dropped in and left with his little boy the sum of seven bank bills, the amount of an old debt. When the tradesman returned his son handed him the money, but thinking the boy was playing April fool on him he threw the roll into the stove.

—Advices from Bombay state that the ravages of the plague are terrible, though not extending beyond the military cordon. Four thousand inhabitants have quitted Mandevi and Bhuj in the unfortunate localities. Mandevi and Dinara were burnt on the spot. The disease has become most virulent, and the afflicted are dying in ten hours after being attacked.

—A black list has been printed by the department of customs, and sent to every collector in the Dominion. It contains the names of all United States exporters who have any time given to voices of goods under value. Collectors are directed to pay particular attention to entries of silks, satins, and other merchandise, made by the undersigned parties.

—The Napanee town council has resolved to submit a by-law to the ratepayers to grant a bonus of $50,000 to assist the erection of glass works with a pot furnace, to employ not less than 45 men, and pay out weekly not less than $700 in wages. The promoters have engaged 300,000 feet of lumber and secured about ten acres of land, which five were given gratis by Mr. S. Cartwright, of Kingston.

—Mr. Auldjo, cashier of the Brapen the Hudson Bay company at Montreal, is a defaulter for a large amount, and has absconded to the United States. The family of the defaulter, consisting of a wife, a son and three handsome daughters, moved in good society in Montreal. He was in the company's employ for seven years, and during that time has been carrying on a system of embezzlement.

—The libel suit brought by the Dominion Mutual against Mr. R. A. Harper, manager of the Dominion Grange Mutual Fire Insurance Co., has resulted in a verdict for the defendant. The case arose out of a letter published in the Canadian Advocate, by Mr. Harper, and written for him by Mr. Bell, which contained statements as to payments of losses and as to their reports to which the London Mutual took exception.

—They have a novel society in Hull in connection with the Roman Catholic cathedral, and which has a membership of 1,000. The members are allowed to drink all the whisky they can get for nothing, but are prohibited from treating their friends or paying for their own beverage. They are not allowed either to sign applications for persons applying for licenses to sell liquor. The organization has only been in existence for a few days, and has created quite an excitement.

—A very pretty quarrel has been going on between the London allopathic physicians and Dr. Kidd, Lord Beaconsfield's medical adviser. The latter is what might be called an "eclectic" that is, a person whose system is partly allopathic and partly homœopathic. Sir William Jenner and Sir William Gull refused to consult with him as to the condition of the illustrious patient on that account, and Dr. Quain could only with difficulty be induced to do so. Public opinion is with Dr. Kidd.

—A new order-in-council has been issued by the Canadian government regulating the transport of Canadian cattle to England in vessels infected from having previously carried diseased cattle from ports in the United States. All such vessels are prohibited from loading cattle in Canada for a period of thirty days after carrying cattle from any port in the United States; all having cases of foot and mouth disease are prohibited for sixty days, and all having pleuro-pneumonia for ninety days and further until such vessels have been thoroughly cleansed and disinfected. This action is taken by the government owing to diseases of a contagious nature having recently been found among cattle landed in England from vessels sailing from Portland and Halifax.

BARN FRAMING.—A CORRECTION.—Having rented my farm and sold off my farm stock and implements, some opposition framers took advantage of the circumstance to report round the country that I had sold out and gone to Dakota. This is not true. The fact is that I have rented my farm and the tenant has moved into the house on the Lee farm adjoining, which I bought last spring from E. D. Orde, and I will be prepared to take contracts as usual to build houses, barns, bridges, &c. of wood, stone, brick or iron on the most reasonable terms.

THE YEARS.

The years are all alike. With childlike laughter
They follow butterflies with endless wings;
They peep into the bird's nest; they look after
White lambs and other pretty things.

Then, in the first flush of their youth, they bring us
Shy gifts of violets in a gallant way;
And ah! what charming low love-songs they sing us
From leaf-green shadows, where the wild doves stay!

But, somewhat later, they show bearded faces,
And sway the scythe and bear the sheaves about
In the hot fields, and quite forget the graces
They had of old—as others do, no doubt.

Still later, they go out for us and gather
The scarlet fruit in and the yellow corn,
Or walk about the withering woods, with rather
A faded look, and sigh and seem forlorn.

Then they sit very still and watch the embers
Behind the curtains in some pictured room,
While each one somewhere in his heart remembers
The dew, the summer moon-rise, and the bloom.

Then comes the last night-watch, the lonesome tapers,
The few tears of the many, prayers quick said;
The black-lined columns in the morning papers,
And yet, the many virtues of the dead!

THE WRECK OF THE "MORNING STAR."

A THRILLING RECORD OF ADVENTURE AND SHIPWRECK.

By the Author of the "Romance of Mid-Ocean."

Chapter XIII.

I wanted a blaze to redden the air so that it should be visible from the deck of a ship fifteen miles at least. If no good came of it it would only have cost me the labor of heaping the materials for the fire; and, at all events, while it burnt it would make the night less lonesome and furnish me with a chance of rescue beyond anything my green lantern would give.

I had noticed a tar bucket full of tar and water under the bowsprit when I was forward getting the lines for constructing the raft. I now fetched it and on emptying the water found about two-thirds of the contents were tar; so, after sawing some of the planks into short pieces I chopped them up, smeared them with tar and laid them upon the raft. I then began to throw the planks over the side on to the raft, working with great energy and spirit until they stood as high as the bulwark. I got on to them and made a wider distribution of them and then regained the hull and turned to and threw more of the planks over, raising many of them by means of the watch tackle until the raft looked as big as a house. However, so soon as she was covered and the top of the freight was level with the rail of the bulwark. I was done, for I could not get any more planks on to it; though had I had a companion we might have built the thing as high as the mainyard by means of a block at the yard-arm and one man to hoist away on the brig and the other to stand on the raft and receive the planks.

But though I could not make my raft bigger it was big enough; indeed, I had entirely cleared the port side of the hull of her deck load.

It was now within half an hour of sunset. I had spent the whole of the day over this raft, and when I came to look back upon my labor and reflected that in a few hours it would be all what Espinosa would call gastados—spent, evaporated—and that the chances were fifty to one against the blaze being seen, or, rather, against there being any ship in the neighborhood to see it, I thought it was scarcely worth while to have gone through so much for so little. Yet even one chance in fifty at a man situated as I was was of great consequence; and besides, if I had not made the raft I dare say when the darkness came I should have chastised myself for an idle fool for not having done so, and made myself miserable by believing that a ship would pass in the night and would certainly have seen the blaze had it been there; so I finished the right thing to please myself, laborious as the job had proved.

One thing vexed me greatly, and this was that the breeze was dying away again. I had no expectation of a steamer being in these seas so far to the westward, and indeed I dared not look for many sailing vessels, and while it remained calm I had nothing to hope from the few which might be in these latitudes.

I had attended to the galley fire during the day, and went to get some tea and after refreshing myself with a wash and making a good meal I ascended as far as the main royal yard with my glass to have a last look round before the sun went down. It proved a fruitless errand. This made me feel very bitter and melancholy, though I had not the least idea when I went aloft that I should signal a vessel.

My eye happening to fall upon the wrecked foretop mast it came into my head to ask myself why I thought it to linger in this spot now that I might be sure the Morning Star was no longer in search of me. I did not make some effort to clear away the raffle forward and get sail upon the vessel and make what headway was possible on a
