In some localities constables have been taking the license and the number plates from drivers of cars, who have been guilty of driving furiously and returning them to the department. It is really a more salutary lesson than a nominal fine. If magistrates, when aggravated cases are brought before them would mete out punishment like this there would be fewer motoring accidents, as fast driving is ninety-five per cent. cause of all trouble. A furious driver is a menace and danger to everyone on the road.
