
THE BRANTFORD LIGHT STEEL BINDER!

Over Four Thousand Sold in Season 1888. Being More Than Half of all Other Binders made in Canada.

The size 1 Frame Double Gear Beaver Drill, the only Double Geared Drill manufactured in Canada.

Before placing their orders for 1889, we respectfully request the farmers to

1st. Carefully examine the "Brantford Machines" and fairly compare with others.

2nd. Enquire of our neighbors who have used "Brantford Machines" and get their opinion of their working and lasting qualities.

If you will follow the above advice, you will be convinced of these two facts:

1st. "Brantford Machines" are possessed of more improvements and are better made than any other machines in Canada.

2nd. "Brantford Machines" are more popular give better satisfaction and are more durable than any other machines in Canada.

Therefore: 1st. Give your order EARLY for a Brantford Binder or Mower.

2nd. And you will be sure to be perfectly satisfied with the machine you get.

No other drill but the Double Geared Drill will start to sow the moment it moves either way.

No other drill can be adapted to sow with either half at a time without stopping the horses or getting off the drill. FOR SALE BY

LETTERS FROM THE FARM.

Specially Written for The Advance.

Life on the farm is just booming now. I have grown two inches since last fall and weigh fifteen pounds more than I did then, and all on account of that watermelon patch. There is nothing calculated to stretch a fellers bones and muscles like good solid exercise with a four pound axe. They raise calves, colts, cats and puppies on milk and coddling, but we fellows have to expand ourselves on porridge and birch gad, which in my opinion, is not according to the eternal fitness of things. That reminds me. Yesterday our teacher sent me out for six birch gads. She wanted to teach me the gadfly dance. I got the gads, took them to my beloved teacher and got them again. While I was getting them the first time I tenderly raised the bark in places and hacked them, like George Washington, only I smoothed the bark back so that I wouldn't have to tell a lie about it and say I didn't do it. Birch bark is the best to do that with. When I got them the second time they fell on my back like the gentle taps of a fairie's wand and didn't hurt worth a cent. I smiled blandly at my fellow pupils and stood it all with a heroism worthy of the early martyrs. Five gads were thus made into matches. The sixth then started to get in its fine work, and when the first blow fell I knew there was something wrong. It whistled through the atmosphere with a business air that informed me I had forgotten to hack it. When it hit I knew the information was correct. The recoil made me jump two feet high, and the magnetism engendered in my body just made my two legs fly around that school house, over desks and under them, but that gad attended strictly to business and kept industriously whacking away fiercely, with a tenacity worthy of a more just cause. The only satisfaction I got out of this thrashing was to hear father belaboring the wood pile late at night while I lay in bed, swathed in bandages and liniment. The moral of this story is, when you undertake a job do it well. I don't much care, though, for I shall lay in bed a week, if sugar making don't start in the meantime.

Martha and her young man had a good time in the parlor last night. You see Martha's dear little brother was out of the way. But I'll fool them some night soon—see if I don't. We have four new calves (including Mat's beaux) and they are all beauties excepting the beaux calf. He is red-haired and wears side whiskers. The others are red, too, but they don't have to wear any such measly-looking red clay mutton chops as the beaux calf. Wait till Mat reads this! We have eight lambs, but Redney isn't one of them. He's no lamb. He held me the other evening while Mat hunted through my pockets and stole a letter. Of course it was her letter, but I don't believe in using force until all kinds of argument are exhausted. That is what makes so much misery in this world. Man arrayed against man, and fight, fight, until one is cowed but not convinced. Now I'm going to steal another letter, sure as guns, and I'll show it to all the boys, and send it to you to publish in The Advance. See if I don't! When I think of that coersive measure of theirs it makes me madder'n the licking did. It makes me so mad that I can't write no more. O rover, as as the Frenchman says.

ZEKE BEADSHAW.

A Recipe Wanted.

Agricultural papers are full of "how to raise calves," How to raise good lambs" and all kinds of garden truck. But there is never a word in them about the raising of cats. That is what The Advance wishes to learn. We wish to be instructed in the proper mode of raising the whole blamed breed so high that they'll never come down. One of them stole our beefsteak this morning and the meal had to be made off cordwood or nothing.
