Three interesting pamphlets sponsored by the Department of Chemistry, at Guelph, are just off the press. They deal with, respectively the effects of artificial manure on alfalfa, potatoes, and celery. Each crop is given a separate pamphlet.

These neat little essays well illustrated, report the results of experiment conducted by the O. A. C. on the crops in question, through demonstration experiments carried on, on farms in various parts of the province under the soil conditions of the farms. In the past four years the department has experimented with fertilizers on more than 4,000 plots.

Written for easy reading, replete with figures and records of the experiments, these three little treatises are well worth every farmer's attention. They are available free, on application to the department of chemistry, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Ontario.

The pamphlet on potatoes is known as extension circular, No. 21; that on alfalfa, No. 22; that on celery, No 23.
