MR. BLAKE IN LONDON.

HIS SPEECH BEFORE THE EIGHTY CLUB.

Complimentary Reference to the Memory of Parnell—Believes that Ireland is on the Eve of Realizing What Parnell Fought for—Canada's Interest in settling the Irish Question—Imperial Interests.

The Eighty Club last Thursday night gave a dinner to Mr. Edward Blake, formerly premier of Ontario, and leader of the liberal party in Canada, who was returned to the house of commons from the South division of Longford in the recent elections.

Mr. James Brice, member of parliament for the South division of Aberdeen, presided at the dinner. In the introductory speech which he delivered he said that although the liberal majority was small it was full of fighting spirit. The one main object of the liberal party was the attainment of home rule for Ireland. Therefore the liberals welcomed a new and powerful ally in the person of Hon. Edward Blake, who brought from Canada a keen intelligence, a large experience as a statesman, and a sound judgment, which would be valuable aids in the solution of the Irish problem.

MR. BLAKE'S SPEECH.

Mr. Blake, in responding to the remarks of Mr. Bryce, recalled the fact that the last time he was present at the Eighty Club, the occasion being a dinner in 1888, he sat beside Mr. Charles Stewart Parnell, who, he said, was a leader of men who compelled rather than conciliated the admiration of the masses. Despite all drawbacks he would retain a great place in history. He referred to Mr. Parnell's confidence in the good faith of his liberal allies and his sincerity in his adherence to moderate constitutional courses. He believed that Ireland was on the eve of realizing the results that Mr. Parnell fought for. The combined efforts of the liberal sections were certain to attain the common objects they had in view. It was well that each of the allied forces recognizes the conditions under which the other is constituted. The Irish party was created and maintained for a definite object under a strict system of discipline allowing only a limited latitude. Experience had shown the truth of the assertion that the Irish interests in the Imperial parliament required a limited system. The parliamentary weapons forged under Mr. Parnell's leadership had such weight, solidity, temper and keenness, and had wrought such great things for Ireland, that the liberals had taken up the Irish cause in an honorable and cordial alliance, creating a friendly feeling between the Irish and British democracies. The might of Parnell's weapons may have been lessened, but even now they were fully adequate for the original purpose for which they were intended. He hoped that the Irish minority would ultimately see that the tactics of the majority were sound. Every one had the interests of Ireland at heart and desired the passage of an effective home rule bill. It might not be that every detail of the measure would be exactly what some Irishmen would like, but, as Mr. Parnell had once said, any sound measure would be cheerfully accepted. If they worked with a desire to make a success of a substantial measure it would give them a field for action in Ireland which would produce so great a feeling of contentment in that country there would be neither time nor inclination for captious criticism or factious agitation.

THE CANADIAN INTEREST.

Mr. Blake also said that the Canadians had a material interest in the settlement of the Irish question. Like the people of every English speaking nation, they had been troubled about home rule. But they were actuated with a nobler spirit than that of self-interest. They remembered the American revolutionary struggle for home rule and the development of home rule in the Canadian possessions, and sympathized with the condition of a nation of fellow-subjects entitled to and refused self-government. England tried the experiment a century ago of giving Canada sole self-government without the essential condition that the executive should be responsible to and therefore controlled by the people. That was done under the fear that they were incapable of self-government, and the belief that the majority being of the same race and creed would use the power thus obtained to oppress the so-called loyal minority. But the system caused gross abuses, discontent and agitation, and on the advice of an able commissioner the government, in 1841, gave a fuller measure of home rule, which largely secured the contentment and affection of the Canadians. Since then the blemishes contained in the measure have been removed as experience guided. The capital error was the legislative union of Upper and Lower Canada, which failed to extinguish the French national feeling and broke down after twenty-five years' trial, when the federal union was substituted. The results fully justified the advocates of home rule. The hostility, jealousy, and opposition of the two provinces have disappeared. Doubtless the constitution of Canada had a seamy side. He belonged to the party numbering half the population, and which for twenty years had been the opposition, and he believed the policy of the government was wrong and injurious. Yet the attachment to home rule was not confined to the dominant party. The minority had rather been misgoverned at home for the moment than well governed from abroad. (Cheers.) They had a powerful Orange party and bigoted Catholics and Protestants, but the sober, settled thought of the people proved the general adhesion to the principle of civil and religious liberty and equal rights. Minorities throughout the world were apt to be suspicious and exacting. He himself believed that the duty of the majority included the moral obligation to give the minority, not a grudging measure of strict justice, but a full, overflowing measure. This was the principle he has expounded to Irish meetings with enthusiastic acceptance.

IRELAND'S IMPERIAL INTERESTS.

He was convinced that the respect, loyalty, and affection of the mass of the Canadians towards the United Kingdom owed their vitality and their strength to the concession of home rule. (Cheers.) The difficulties in the case of Canada did not exist in Ireland. Ireland had great Imperial interests in common with England. While she could not claim to participate in the decisions of England's local affairs, she would be unworthy of herself if she did not take a share in the Imperial affairs. Therefore she strongly opposed the exclusion of Irish members from Westminster, which was indefensible in principle and dangerous in tendency. He rejoiced that it had been eliminated from the present home rule proposals and that the supremacy of the imperial parliament would continue, because while it was hoped that the imperial parliament would not unnecessarily meddle with decisions of the Irish parliament, yet in the highly improbable case of ultra vires legislation being proposed prejudicial to the general interests, Great Britain could always exercise plenary parliamentary authority and might insert executive powers of reservation and disallowance in case of such emergencies. He hoped the home rule bill would embrace a final settlement of the land question. There were also great British social, labor, and electoral questions which he thought might be grappled with during the lifetime of the present parliament. When the home rule bill was launched and moving steadily along he would welcome the progress in its wake of other pressing legislation which would give the masses of Ireland, through their representatives in parliament, an opportunity to show their sympathy with the just demands of the British people. (Cheers.)

PRESS CRITICISM.

Mr. Blake's address is the chief subject of political comment in the papers to-day. Some surprise is felt that Mr. Blake followed his manuscript so closely, but the subject matter of the speech was warmly praised by the audience last night and heartily recognized by the liberal press to-day.

The Pall Mall Gazette says the statement of Canada's experiences as a Canadian argument for home rule was a most important contribution to the subject. Mr. Blake's remarks on the relation of home rule to other political questions were the voice of common sense.

The Daily News says that Mr. Blake's grasp of the situation was firm and thorough.

The Star says that the speech more than fulfilled the expectation of an authoritative review of the inner working of home rule.

The Times, however, makes a severe criticism, and says that Mr. Blake has no real acquaintance with the problem he purported to treat of. At the best he was only humorous in his speech. When Mr. Blake was referring to a possible rejection of the bill by the house of lords he quoted the proverb:—"It is time enough to bid the devil good morning when you meet him."

EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

—An outbreak of phylloxera is reported in the Avize-Cramant district of France, the vineyards of which are among the finest in Champagne.

—Edward de Cobain, who was expelled from the British parliament on the charge of committing foul crimes at Belfast, Ireland, is in New York, and is creating a sensation as an exhorter at revival meetings.

—In a runaway near Walkerville Tuesday, Wm. McGregor, M. P. for Essex, had his left leg broken below the knee and sustained other severe injuries. Capt. Sullivan and Rev. Mr. Holmes, who were in the same carriage, escaped with a shaking up.

—A ghastly sight was witnessed at St. Albans Monday evening. As soon as the Montreal train arrived a man's foot was found between the spokes of the driving wheel, and as a fatal accident was at once suspected, the company despatched a number of men along the track over which the train had just passed. At the end of the the tenth mile back from St. Albans two legs were found, both cut off close to the body. A rod or two further on an arm was discovered, the second being found a short distance away. Further search revealed the victim's head, which was lying in the ditch, while the trunk in a fearfully mangled condition was picked up on the other side of the road. The searching party having placed all the remains in a car, they were taken to St. Albans, where an inquest will be held. When the last train left no identification had taken place.

—Charles Mackenzie, jr., son of Charles Mackenzie, M. P. P., and Fred. Gorman, son of Hy. Gorman, editor of the Observer, left Wees Beach Tuesday night about 1.30 o'clock for the camping ground about three miles further up the lake where their relatives were camping. Nothing was heard of them until noon to-day, when, after investigating, a tug with citizens and Dr. Johnston started in search. About six miles up the lake and four miles from shore Mackenzie was picked up, having been rescued by H. M. Richardson and Will Mackenzie, who had gone in a small boat from the shore, and after an hour's more search Gorman was found three miles from shore and clinging to a couple of small planks taken from the small boat. Both Mackenzie and Gorman were about exhausted, and a few minutes more would have settled their fate. Their sail boat had tipped over about 3 o'clock that morning, and they had been in the water fifteen or sixteen hours. They are doing nicely.

MRS. GEORGE KIRK'S DEATH.—Mrs. Geo. Kirk died at an early hour Tuesday morning at her residence, 89 Pinkle street, after an illness of about three months. Deceased was 36 years of age and was a sister of Mr. C. H. Hill. Death was caused from dropsy. Although no children are left the circumstances surrounding Mrs. Kirk's illness and death are painfully sad and now that she has gone to the world beyond friends will extend their sincerest sympathy to the bereaved husband. Throughout her illness the beloved wife bore her affliction with wonderful Christian fortitude, and when the hour of separation came she passed peacefully away with implicit confidence in her Redeemer's promise. The funeral will take place at 2 p. m., Thursday to the Baptist cemetery.

SOCIAL AND PRESENTATION.—A social entertainment in behalf of Doctor Allan and his lady on their departure from our midst took place at the residence of Mr. William McGill, Janetville, on August 4th. When all present had partaken of the good things of Providence, the doctor and his lady and family were asked to come forward, and were presented with very handsome presents. Where honor is due honor should be given. The band from Bethany give some of their choice selections on the occasion, which added very much to the enjoyment of the evening. When separation time came that good old song, "Auld Lang Syne," was given by Mrs. Allan, assisted in the chorus by those present. Following is a copy of the address presented, to Dr. Allan and family:—Dr. Allan, Janetville—DEAR SIR,—When we first became aware of your intended removal from our midst, we received the news with many regrets, and now that the time has come we are very sorry to lose you. You have made many friends in this place, and it is with deep regret that we have so soon to say good-bye. We cannot allow you to leave without this meeting to express our sincere appreciation of you and your estimable wife, and to assure you that you carry away the best respects and kindest regards of all. Your thoughtful attention shown us in our sicknesses shall not be forgotten. You have been hearty and generous in support of every good cause, honest and honorable in all your professional dealings, liberal and considerate with those in meagre circumstances. Your aim seems not to have been to make gain out of the people's afflictions, but the higher and nobler purpose of serving your fellow-men by relieving as far as human skill could their ailments. Though in this as in all legitimate callings "the labourer is worthy of his hire," your motive has not been that of the hireling. Please accept these slight gifts from your many friends and well-wishers as tokens of remembrance, not on account of their intrinsic value, but that they may recall the past and bring to your mind the many friends in Manvers—to yourself this case; to Mrs. Allan this biscuit box; to Moretto and May these cups and saucers; and to Robert this knife, fork and spoon. We are sorry to part; our best wishes follow you, and our prayer will be that a kind Providence may bless and direct your way.—Signed on behalf of the committee.

SAD FATALITY.—A sad fatality occurred at Manhattan Beach Monday, about ten miles below Belleville, which was visited by a terrific tornado. Charles Parrott, son of George Parrott, Napanee, was camping with his uncle, Fred. Parrott, when the tornado struck the camp. Young Parrott ran out of the tent to hold it down, when a huge basswood tree broke like a pipe stem and was hurled against him with great force. Both of his legs were broken. He was carried to the house of Uncle Charles Peck, where Drs. Aine and Moore pronounced the case hopeless, the victim having sustained fatal internal injuries.

HUCKLEBERRIES.—Berrypicking is the rage at present; the rumble of wheels may be heard even in the sma' hours of night, as parties from a distance are making their way to or from the rocks. It is quite amusing to notice the dilapidated condition of the returning excursionists—they present a striking contrast to the lively parties going out.

BEE AND DANCE.—The dance given at Mr. A. Jacob's on the 4th inst, was attended by a large number of young people, quite a few coming from Eldon and Bexley. Everyone appeared to have enjoyed themselves.

PERSONAL.—Mrs. P. McGee has returned from Toronto, where she had been spending some weeks under the care of a skilled oculist.....Mr. D. LOST.—Mr. Hector McFadyen of the Portage Road, while going to Brechin a short time ago lost his pocketbook containing $350. It was lucky for Hector that Dr. Wood came over the road a few hours afterwards and picked it up.

CORRECTION.—An item in the Kirkfield correspondence of a few weeks ago stated that the great wind storm of last month severely damaged Mr. Gusty's hotel—This was a mistake. The Gusty house is a fine new brick hotel, and the wind had no effect on it whatever—it did however, do considerable damage to the sheds.

CIVIC HOLIDAY.—Tuesday, August 16th, is spoken of as civic holiday. As this is considered our best pic-nic of the year we hope to see the usual interest taken in it as formerly—A good day's sport is promised, and the usual games and amusements, —with perhaps a baseball match between the Kirkfield and Coboconk or Victoria Road teams.

SCHOOL OPENING.—Our public schools open on Monday, August 15. It is hoped that there will be a good attendance, as the different classes will be arranged and promotions made.
