FEVERSHAM

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong (nee Maxiene Davidson) and Babe of Barrie visited with Mrs. Armstrong's parents Mr. and Mrs. J. Davidson here last week.

Miss Betty Colquette and brother, Allen, of Owen Sound, visited their grandparents here last week.

A number of cars needed help to get through the snow drifts on Monday morning after the storm. This village was not snowed in but the country was very nearly snowed out.

The trucks were trying to break a road through on Monday for the hauling of logs to Rock Mills.

Mr. George Sled will have a pile of snow to shovel off the rink, but he will have it ready to skate in short order if it stops snowing soon and there is a dandy sheet of ice for the lovers of that sport.

Messrs. E. Robinson and son have shipped another truck load of fowl for the Christmas market. They got through to Highway No. 10 on Monday.

Coronation Day May 12

King George VI will be crowned May 12 next year in Coronation ceremonies originally planned for his brother, former King Edward. Official announcement of the Coronation plans was made shortly before the new ruler was proclaimed King in public ceremonies. Peeresses attending the crowning next year will wear coronets as the present monarch brings a queen to the throne with him.

Greetings . .

The Holiday Season is at hand and with it the opening of one's heart with the wish and desire that all should feel happy at this Yuletide Season. Extending happiness brings happiness.

We value your friendship highly and ask you to accept this wish, the old wish, but ever new and sincere—

A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year

Merit Wins The Soul

A Christmas Story
By Agnes Myers

IT WAS Christmas eve and Jane Harrison was preparing to close the Book and Gift shop after a busy day. The door opened and an elderly man wearing spectacles and a white muffler entered hurriedly.

Setting aside his gloves and cane, and hastily scanning the shelves, he said: "I have but a few moments to make a selection; perhaps you could assist me. Something for an elderly lady."

Jane was more than a bookseller; she was reader. And, too, she could quickly sense the literary taste of an individual. Delving into a case she brought forth Mrs. Gaskell's "Life of Charlotte Bronte"; also "Sonnets from the Portuguese" and "Out of Doors in the Holyland." all in new holiday bindings.

"Here are some delightful gift books," she remarked.

The gentleman raised a pair of surprised eyes and wonderingly surveyed the girl, rather than the books. Drawing a wallet from his inner coat he replied:

"My dear young lady, your excellent choice has tempted me to take all three." Handing Jane a card he continued, "please have them sent over to Miss Adelaide Perkins, Burton street, number 78."

Thanking her he dashed out to his cab and was gone.

"Seventy-eight Burton street!" gasped Jane, "and the delivery boy gone for the night on his last round!"

Locking the store and with Miss Adelaide Perkins' gift in the hollow of her arm, the tired girl started off on her errand.

Jane and her widowed mother had lived in Edgebrook on a small income. She attended Miss Edmonds' School for Girls as a day student and received a very thorough education. In the evenings Jane worked in the town library. Her mother passed away and Jane had gone to the city. This was her first Christmas to be alone.

At the Perkins address the door was opened by an elderly lady. "My goodness, child! A package for me! Do step in." But before she could close the door a boy called out:

"Telegram for Perkins."

"Yes, yes," she said, all bewildered.

"Mercy me, where are my glasses!" and she fumbled around in her pocket.

"I'll sign for you, if I may," said Jane.

"Yes, please do—dear, dear, where are my glasses! Oh, here they are," and Miss Perkins' fine patient hands trembled as she opened the envelope.

"It is from my nieces, the Bosworth girls. They are driving down from Hartland tomorrow afternoon and will be here for tea with me around five."

"Your nieces the Bosworth girls!" exclaimed Jane; "not Emilie and Susan! Why, they were my best friends at Miss Esmonds' school," and thoughts of Edgebrook dashed through her mind. The June commencement — Richard Bosworth, the tall brother, up from the city for the festivities.

"And don't forget, tomorrow at five," called Miss Perkins as Jane was departing.

The next afternoon Jane helped Miss Perkins put the finishing touches to a table set in blue china of willow pattern. There was the sound of a motor, then merry voices in the hall. Emilie, Susan, Richard, Uncle Carroll, the elderly gentleman who had sent the books, were greeting Miss Perkins.

"Why Jane Harrison!" gasped the Bosworth girls in one breath.

Then followed such excited exclamations; the bliss of renewed friendship.

With a rustle of her silken skirts Miss Perkins led the way to the diningroom. Jane sat opposite Richard. She liked the strength in his broad shoulders, his well modulated voice and his clear honest eyes. Emotions of newly awakened interest roused her sentiments.

Richard was beaming across the table at the young woman in the blue frock; her quaint charm, rippling laughter, the glance of her brown eyes and the lift of her pretty shoulders.

As the happy gathering moved into the sitting room Jane felt the warmth of a large hand gripping her own slim one. Looking up, she smiled into Richard's firm and understanding face.

Uncle Carroll, with an approving nod, stroked his beard like a prophet, and reflected upon the words of the poet:

Charms strike the sight
But merit wins the soul.

ROCK MILLS

Your correspondent wishes the Advance staff and its many readers a very Merry Christmas.

Armstrong Bros. of Markdale have rented Mr. Ned Crofts steam Engine to use in their saw mill. Mr. Croft will take the engine to Markdale as soon as the roads are fit.

We extend our sincere sympathy to Mrs. John Heard and daughters in their sad bereavement.

The heavy snow fall made some of the roads heavy for travelling and trucks were not able to make many trips with logs on Monday.

Mr. Glen Croft has been assisting Mr. Albert Blackburn in the bush.
