In time it will produce such symptoms as the following: Nervousness, weakness in the back, unsteady limbs, tired and exhausted feeling, pains in the loins, irritation of the bladder and kidneys, sediment and loss in urine, emissions at night with lewd dreams, sexual weakness and decline of manly power—these symptoms gradually develop into NERVOUS DEBILITY and IMPOTENCY. Our Root Crop Seeds

Every careful stockman recognizes the fact that flush pasture is the ideal feed for keeping all classes of live stock in a hearty thriving condition, but in most parts of this country it is necessary to provide large stores of sulent feed for the long winter feed, for the long winter months when pasture is not available. The various sorts of roots go a long way towards supplying a cheap and satisfactory substitute for grass, and in consequence many million bushels are grown annually. Large quantities of seed of turnips, swedes, mangolds and carrots are used each year on Canadian farms, but the crops produced are frequently disappointing. As a rule our farmers have hitherto been entirely in the dark regarding the sources of supply of such seeds, and the methods of growing them. The Seed Division of the Dominion Department of Agriculture has been investigating these questions, and is able to offer suggestions that cannot fail to be of value to growers of root crops. According to Chief G. H. Clark of the Seed Division, a few farmers in Canada make a specialty of growing root crop seed, but practically the whole amount of such seed offered in the trade is imported from Europe and is grown in France, Germany and England. A favorable climate and cheap labor have made these countries the seed gardens of the world. A few notes on the way in which seeds are grown there, will help to explain why farmers often fail to get roots showing good type and uniform excellence all over a field.

Turnips, swedes, mangolds and carrots are all biennial plants, that is they store up nourishment in the root during the whole of the first year, and use that store of food for the production of seed during the second and final year of their life. Most of our domesticated plants have been evolved from wild types through long years of selection, cultivation and cross fertilization. The original wild types were usually annuals, producing seed the first year, and there is a tendency among all improved plants to revert rapidly to the old unimproved types, whenever they are deprived of that careful attention to selection and cultivation which has brought them up to their present high standing.

Canadian farmers have not fully realized that the value of root crop seeds is far from depending on their vitality alone. It is even more important that they be taken from carefully grown and selected stocks. We seldom see a field of roots that are uniformly true to type and free from abnormal growth of top, large necks and ill shaped, prongy roots. This undesirable state of affairs is largely due to the sowing of seeds taken from stocks of a similar character.

The best quality of seed is produced from selected and transplanted roots. Seed of turnips and swedes is produced in quantity in this manner in the north of Scotland. The climate of Scotland, like that of Canada, is such that root crop seeds can only be successfully produced by harvesting the roots before winter and transplanting them the following spring. The bulk of the seed of these crops, which is imported for the Canadian trade, is grown in France and the South of England, where the climate is such that the roots may remain unharvested through the winter and produce seed the following year. Some of the more reliable seed growers in these countries exercise a great deal of care in the production of their stock. They supply the seed from their own celected stocks to small farmers, who grow quantities of seed for them under contract. The best quality of seed offered in the Canadian trade is grown in this way. There is however evidence to show that a great deal of the seed of these crops offered in Canada, is of much inferior quality. The increased labor required to grow seed fom selected transplanted roots, raises the price above the range of American seed firms. For this the seedsman is not to blame. Our farmers have demanded cheap seeds without any guarantee as to quality, and the seedsmen have simply tried to meet the demand. A great deal of the root crop used in Canada is grown by small irresponsible European farmers whose chief object is to obtain a maximum yield of seed, independent of its quality. In growing these stocks it is a common practice to sow late in the season after an early crop has been harvested from the land. Young plants thus produced are in many cases not thinned, and do not grow to a reasonable size during the first season. From a crop of this sort a very large amount of top is produced, and a large quantity of seed obtained per acre at a minimum cost.

It would be unreasonable for our farmers to grow root crop seeds for Canadian trade and compete in the matter of price with the seed produced by the above method where labor is so cheap, and climatic conditions so favorable. Until the consumers of these seeds learn that it pays to use only seed that is taken from selected and transplanted roots, grown in a climate similar to that where the seed is wanted for use, the quantity of home-grown offered in the trade will be extremely limited. It therefore appears that growers of root crops will find it to their advantage to purchase only seeds from extra selected stocks, no matter what the price may be, or better still, grow their own seed from the best and most typical roots raised on their own farms.

The Ferris wheel, one of the attractions of the Chicago Exposition of 1893, was recently sold at public auction for $1,800, engines, boilers, and all. Originally the contrivance cost $362,000. It is said there are about $300,000 worth of bonds outstanding against the owners of the wheel, as well as an indebtedness of $100,000.
