Restoring Fertility,

The problem to-day is how to restore the fertility of the soil and at the same time make a living off the land. What system of cultivation will enable us to obtain a soil that with a fair amount of vegetable matter to at least the depth of a few inches?

The Ontario and Dominion Experimental Farms seem to have solved the problem by adopting shallow cultivation and a systematic rotation of crops in which clover occupies a prominent place. Under this method, as outlined by Prof. Reynolds, the land is plowed only once in every three or four years, all the rest of the cultivation being done by harrows, cultivators and other implements which cut, crush, pulverize and loosen, but do not invert the soil.

To show clearly the method of summer cultivation, let us suppose that the second year's crop has been taken off a clover field. The sod is plowed about August, as early as possible in order to take advantage of the summer's heat to decompose the roots. Then it is harrowed to loosen the surface and prevent the escape of moisture, which is also required in decomposition. After that it is cultivated frequently, without tearing up the sod, the objects being to destroy the weeds that may be growing and enable the sod to rot by keeping in the moisture. As the manure is plowed in with the sod, it will be well decomposed before winter, thus ensuring a good supply of humus for the next crop. The last thing in the fall the land should be ribbed up in the same manner as for turnip drills. This is best done with a double moldboard plow. This ribbing prevents leaching away of the plant food, most of which is heaped into the drills; exposes a greater surface to the pulverizing action of frost; and allows a more rapid drying in the spring, and consequently earlier working and seeding.

Freaks of Lightning.

The Walkerton Telescope says: During the thunder storm on Wednesday evening last, there was a particularly brilliant flash of lightning, followed by a report that seemed to make every building in town tremble. As a matter of fact the lightning bolt did strike a house in town, and in view of the havoc it wrought the wonder of it is that the occupants of the house were not killed. This house is situated in the west end, and is occupied by Miss Mary Clendenning and her brother George. It was what is known among insurance men as a dry stroke, that is to say, it did not set the building on fire. The lightning entered the room occupied by Miss Clendenning a little below the ceiling, making quite a large hole in the wall. Then the fluid, or whatever it is, spread all over the ceiling and walls, tearing the paper off in patches and puncturing the ceiling full of holes about as large as would be made with buckshot. The sewing machine which was standing close to the wall then came in for some attention. Four holes similar to those in the ceiling were bored through the top, while the enameling had been burnt off the wheel. Then the fluid had run down the legs and penetrated the floor beneath. Miss Clendenning at the time was standing about three feet from the machine, and partially stunned. Her brother, sitting farther over in the room, had one foot somewhat injured. In another room several picture frames were badly injured. Outside one of the gate posts was splintered, and the ground torn up around a spruce tree, exposing the roots. Some damage, too, was done to the stable. Altogether it was a pretty close call.

When Weeds Are Troublesome

Surface cultivation affords the best means of destroying weeds, depending largely upon the sort of crops grown and the nature of the weeds themselves. One method is to prevent the seed from maturing by growing a hoed crop or an early maturing crop such as clover. With a late maturing crop, which allows the weed seeds to ripen, it is advisable to adopt surface cultivation after harvest, so as to encourage these seeds to germinate the same season, when the young plants can be destroyed. Under such circumstances it is a too common practice to bury the seeds by deep plowing, leaving them in a condition to come to the surface and germinate in some future crop, in which very likely it will be impossible to destroy them.

That John Linklater is still in the land of the living, he owes perhaps to the fates. During the severe electrical storm on Wednesday of last week, he took refuge under a hay cole at McIntyre's farm, but seeing the other men running in a different direction left this one and got under another. Shortly after a blinding flash, followed by a heavy report, directed the men's attention to a burning cole, and it proved to be the identical one under which John had first taken refuge. Beneath the ashes of the hay was found a round hole about five inches in diameter where the lightning had struck.—Gaand Valley Star-Vidette.

The question of building a new union station at Toronto by the G. T. R. and C. P. R., which was somewhat complicated by the announcement that the Canadian Northern Railway would expropriate the proposed site in the burned district for station purposes, has been settled by the Railway Commission, which after hearing the interested parties last week decided to issue an order for the expropriation by the Grand Trunk Railway of all lands between York and Yonge streets and Esplanade and Front streets, except some C. P. R. lots near York street, and that all railways shall be entitled to entry to the new station on equal terms. The new station will cost $1,000,000, and work is to begin in one year and the station completed within three years.
