Ten or twelve years ago Maurice Dowd was one of the most prosperous and respected farmers of Arthur township but in an evil day for himself and his family he disposed of his fine farm and entered upon the career of hotel keeper at Arthur village. Soon he fell into drinking himself and in a few years had become a hopeless drunkard. From Arthur he drifted to Fergus and thence to Teeswater where his course as hotel keeper was wound up last year. There are six or seven small children who have been living with relatives since the mother became insane through the wild career of her husband. Dowd's experience in hotel keeping is a touching object lesson in temperance. He was worth fifteen or twenty thousand dollars on the farm, but to-day he is financially worthless, his children are dependent upon friends, his wife is in an asylum and he himself is a wanderer in the west.—Grand Valley Star.
