SOCIETIES.

"Economist's" letter, in another column, contains some practical, common sense remarks. We have often thought of the subject, although not precisely from "Economist's" standpoint. The most important thought which suggested itself to our mind, was the amount of time consumed during the sessions of our various societies which might be far better spent by heads of families around the home circle. The spirit of selfishness engendered, too, in those societies which do not admit females within their charmed circles, was another thought suggested. Now comes "Economist," who gives us food for thought in another direction. See the amount of money expended in connection with these institutions, he says, for which there is not an adequate return. And is it not true? Undoubtedly it is. But, then, if the people are perfectly willing to bear the heavy burdens of supporting these societies, says another, its nobody's business. Yes, but a great many may not have counted the cost. Because they are only asked to pay 25 cents now, or a dollar some other time, they never trouble themselves as to the aggregate cost for three, six, or twelve months; and then if Mr. X can pay his way in such and such society, why not Mr. B. or somebody else who are equally as able, financially, to do so. This last is an argument which has been used thousands of times outside of societies, and has involved hundreds in financial ruin. It is a most illogical argument, but it appeals to that inherent human weakness for pomp and display, and unless counterbalanced by correct business principles, is almost sure to be attended by serious if not disastrous results.

But, aside from the amount of money necessarily employed in the maintenance of these societies, the subject presents another equally important aspect. Business men—and they are the chief supporters of such societies—who are members of two and three societies, (and sometimes more) find that, between attending the meetings of their various societies, public meetings, entertainments, and such like, they have scarcely an evening in the whole week to spend with their families. Thus many important home duties are neglected, and there is not that social intercourse between parents and children which tends to develop character and strengthen those endearing bonds which should be the prominent characteristics of all happy and well ordered homes. The absence of the head of the house engenders a spirit of carelessness and indifference on the part of the children, and frequently leads them to seek elsewhere for those pleasures and healthful recreations not to be found around their own firesides. Boys and girls not yet in their teens and in their teens, are to be found wandering about the streets at the most unseemly hours; mingling with good and bad companions; picking up and soon glib in the interchange of slang phrases; acquiring loose and disorderly habits, and, in many instances, something far worse—these are amongst the many evils resulting from the continued absence from the home circle of heads of families.

"SACRED ADVERTISING."

The Flesherton Advance, the Mount Forest Representative and a few other sheets should credit that article on Sacred Advertising to the Bulletin and not the enterprise. When the successful student does strike a good thing let the devil have his due.—Beeton World.

We are indebted to the Collingwood Bulletin for the above clipping, as although we regularly send THE ADVANCE to the Beeton World office we have not as yet received a solitary copy of the latter paper. However, we may inform the Beeton World that when we clip an article from the Bulletin we'll give it due credit; but as we did not do so in the case referred to, must hold ourself excluded from the World's lists of papers that "should credit that article on Sacred Advertising to the Bulletin and not to the Enterprise." We are aware that the "successful student" had an excellent article on the subject, but as we misplaced the copy of the Bulletin containing the same, we adopted the next best course by publishing the Enterprise's remarks upon the same subject. We might remark that the discussion of this subject did not originate with either the Bulletin or Enterprise, and neither of these papers, therefore, deserve special credit.

Riel.

In reference to the execution of Louis Reil at Regina on Monday last, we clip the following concise yet comprehensive and fair article from the Toronto World of Monday:—

"Louis Riel ascends the scaffold this morning as a knave who has at last encountered his doom. He was no patriot, and those who have been working in his behalf were spending themselves on an unworthy object. He offered to sell all his dupes for $35,000. His treatment of Thomas Scott was of a cruelty in keeping with his savage nature. There is not one redeeming feature in his whole career. His insanity was feigned. He raised two rebellions, and if let go would have headed a third.

Reil was a dangerous man, who is well out of the road. We are not inclined to call for any man's blood, and are sorry to think that capital punishment still exists, but society has only one way to protect itself, and that is by making an example on the scaffold. With Riel's removal Northwest rebellions are at end. The trade hereafter will be too risky.

As for the French Canadians, we fail to see why they should make com'n cause with a murderer. The truth of the matter is that they do not. All this talk coming from Quebec in favor of Riel was worked up for party purposes. The great mass of the French people and all their leaders are on the side of the law.

Heaven forbid that Riel should go to his death because he has French blood in his veins; he is removed simply because he is a man dangerous to the entire society of Canada.

The Canadian people by this execution have given the world, and especially that class for whom the New York Herald and the Sun speak, to understand that they are going to settle their difficulties themselves. So, too, may the ill-advised philanthropists of London take the same lesson to heart. And if there be a section of the community in Quebec who think that because a French Canadian issue is raised, therefore it must be given into, that section will know that the Canadian people as a whole will not allow such race prejudices to rule.

Riel dies, not because he is a French halfbreed, not because he is a patriot worthy of martyrdom, but because he is a man who in the past has been dangerous almost to the destruction of the Canadian community.

The Gospel Army held service in the Methodist church on Monday evening. Notwithstanding the state of the roads the congregation was large, many from a distance being present. The Army have completed their labors at Corbetton for the present, and the next point to be reached will be Maxwell.—Dundalk Herald.
