A Discovery of Vast Importance

It Is Now Admitted That Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Coughs, and Colds Can Only Be Quickly Cured By Mixing a New Medicine With the Air You Breathe.

Scientists acknowledge that medicated air treatment is the only treatment that will cure these diseases, and that stomach medicines are worse than useless.

Catarrhozone air treatment has been found to be the most effective way to cure all diseases of the throat, lungs, and nasal passages. Its action is so prompt that in less than an hour an ordinary cold is cured, and after a more thorough use of Catarrhozone, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and all diseases of the throat and lungs are completely cured.

Catarrhozone is a very simple and powerful method of treatment. You simply breathe it through the inhaler and it immediately passes over every air cell of the throat, lungs, and bronchial tubes, curing and healing as it goes.

Catarrhozone treatment affords little drops of healing for sore places in the lungs, throat, and nasal passages.

HANGING A HORSE.

Trial and Execution of a Steed Which Overturned a Carriage.

The following account of the private trial and execution of a horse by command of the fantastic Marquis de Briqueville is taken from an article entitled "Biographie des Excentriques," originally published without signature in La Republique du Peuple, described as "Almanach Democratique, Paris, chez Prost, 1850," and republished in Oeuvres Posthumes of Baudelaire, Paris. The article is evidently one of Baudelaire's bits of hack work, but even here the master's touch is felt:

"First of all let us mention the Marquis de Briqueville, a very rich person, popularly deemed crazy and probably slightly so. At least he did all that was necessary to justify the opinion one had of him. One day as he was rushing violently through the streets in his brilliant equipage one of his horses fell. The carriage was upset, and the marquis received an ugly contusion. He is brought back to his mansion; he is in a rage; he wants to dismiss his coachman. The latter justifies himself. The accident was not caused by any fault of his. One of the horses is to blame. 'If it be so,' says the marquis, 'the horse must be punished; every fault must have its penalty.' He orders all his household to appear—steward, butler, valets, scullions, grooms. It is a veritable court of justice. They all take their places. The marquis presides. The accused is brought in. He preserves in his noble bearing the calmness of innocence. The coachman makes the accusation. The secretary of the marquis, filling the office of lawyer, presents the defence of the quadruped. He is long-winded, heavy, flat, exactly as if he was pleading before Parliament. He quotes the Digest; he spits Latin. He concludes by requesting that his client should be returned to the stable, whose finest ornament he is. The case is heard. The marquis gives his opinion first. He considers the accusation as proved. He votes for the sentence of death. All his valets hurry to vote like him. The whole thing seemed to them a joke. They were mistaken. The marquis had a scaffold erected in his yard. He addressed to the condemned a prolix discourse, in which he made him feel the enormity of his crime. During this oratorical display the unfortunate victim looked upon the instrument of torture with a firm eye—no affectation of courage, no despondency.

"As soon as the marquis had finished a groom threw with dexterity a rope around the neck of the patient, and a few seconds later the poor animal was suspended in the air, the coachman was pulling his feet down, a valet was stamping on his shoulders. The hanging was as correct as those daily exhibited in the square of the Greve. The attendants were stupefied with astonishment."

Victim of a Soft Heart.

The prison visitor looked at the occupant of cell 49 through eyes that were dim with tears and passed a few fragrant blossoms between the iron bars.

"You poor unfortunate!" she exclaimed. "So you were brought to this through sympathy for another. Tell me all about it. Perhaps something can be done to set you free."

"Well, mum, 'twas this way," exclaimed the convict. "When me an' my mate cracked the crib we found the bank watchman asleep, an' we tied and gagged him. It was him as afterward identified me."

"Yes, and the sympathy for another?" asked the visitor.

"It was fer him, mum. My mate wanted ter stick a knife in him. If I hedn't been a fool an' done it I wouldn't be here a-talkin' ter you now."

Marriage Deals In France.

French marriages turn out surprisingly successful, although they are generally arranged by the parents of the bride and bridegroom. In some parts of provincial France the wishes of a man or a maid are as often not taken into consideration by the parents "making the deal." In one province a lover, after declaring his passion, may receive, while sitting at dinner at the house of his beloved, from her hands a plate of pea soup into which she has grated some cheese. He relishes that soup, for the grated cheese means that he has been accepted. If his addresses to the young woman are not welcome he finds that some one has placed a stinging nettle and some oats in his pocket. Another unmistakable sign is when the young woman turns the blackened end of a poker toward him.

Accurate Measure.

A laborer in a dockyard was one day given a two foot rule to measure a piece of iron plate. Not being accustomed to the use of the rule, he returned it after wasting a good deal of time.

"Well, Bill," remarked the foreman, "what is the size of the plate?"

"Well," replied he, with a smile which accompanies duty performed, "it's the length of your rule and two thumbs over, with this piece of brick and the breadth of my hand and arm and from here to there, bar a finger."
—London Mail.

Joke Medicine.

He is a very practical, serious minded man of business. The other day he met a friend and related to him an alleged joke and at its conclusion laughed long and heartily. The friend looked awkward for a moment and then said:

"You'll have to excuse me, old man, but I don't just see the point."

"Why, to tell you the truth, I don't just see the point myself. But I've made it a rule to laugh at all jokes; I think it's good for the health."

Just the Same.
