MOST APPRECIATED.

Young James had never heard his papa speak in public, and it was thought time to take him to hear his father deliver a lecture.

During the evening a stray dog which ventured upon the platform was disposed of as gracefully as possible.

On the way home James was asked how he liked his father's lecture, and gave the answer:

"It was all right, papa, but I liked the part where you put the dog out the best."

MINARD'S LINIMENT CO., LIMITED.

GENTLEMEN,—I have used MINARD'S LINIMENT from time to time for the past twenty years. It was recommended to me by a prominent physician of Montreal, who called it the "great Nova Scotia Liniment." It does the doctor's work; it is particularly good in cases of Rheumatism and Sprains.

Yours truly,
G. G. DUSTAN,
Chartered Accountant.

Father—"It's singular that whenever I want you to marry a man you object, and whenever I do not want you to marry one you straightway insist on it." Daughter—"Yes, and whenever we are agreed the man objects."

They cleanse while they cure.—The vegetable compounds of which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are composed, mainly dandelion and mandrake, clear the stomach and intestines of deleterious matter and restore the deranged organs to healthful action. Hence they are the best remedy for indigestion available to-day. A trial of them will establish the truth of this assertion and do more to convince the ailing than anything that can be written of these pills.

IN SPITE OF JOHNSON.

Good Story of the Absent-Minded Doctor Butt.

Doctor Butt, a chaplain to King George III. and the father of Mrs. Sherwood, the author, was inclined to be absent-minded, but his family was constantly on the alert to protect him from annoyance, so that his carelessness was not generally known. In her diary Mrs. Sherwood gives a little anecdote in which Doctor Butt's lack of memory placed him in a position which his own quick sense of humor made enjoyable instead of absurd.

He was invited to dine at Lord Stamford's. It was the custom when he was going out to arrange his best suit on a sofa in his study, his linen and stockings being in a wardrobe in the same room.

He was very much engaged in some writing that day, but thinking that he would be quite prepared when apprized that John and the horses were ready, he laid down his pen at an early hour, dressed himself, and laid his old black suit in the place from which he had taken the new one.

Then, to make the best of his time, he sat down to write again, till admonished that the horses were waiting.

"Bless me," he said, "and I not dressed!" and he hurriedly put on fresh linen and another pair of silk stockings and the old coat and waistcoat, which, as they lay where the new ones ought to have been, came most naturally to hand.

A greatcoat over all concealed the mischief from John, and away he set out, and arrived a little before dinner.

He happened to know Johnson, Lord Stamford's butler, an old and valued servant. As he stopped in the hall to take off his greatcoat, Johnson, having looked hard at his elbows, said:

"You have a large hole, sir, in your elbow, and the white lining is visible."

"Indeed!" said my father. "How can that be? Let me consider." After some reflection he made out the truth as it really had happened.

"Well, sir," said Johnson, "come to my room and we will see what can be done." So he took my father into his own precincts, brushed him, inked his elbow, and put him into better order than had at first seemed possible, and when all was complete, he said:

"Now, sir, go into the drawing-room, set a good face on the matter, and my life for it, not a lady or gentleman will find you out."

My father promised to be vastly prudent, and as he was always equally at home in every company, he was not in the least disturbed by the consciousness of his old clothes and inked elbows.

But when dinner was nearly over, he turned toward the butler and said, "Johnson, it must not be lost." The man frowned and shook his head, but all in vain. "It is much too good, Johnson. Though you are ever so angry with me, I must tell it."

Then came the whole story, to the great delight of the noble party present, and to the lasting gratification of my father himself, for he never failed to be highly pleased when he could tell the story, and spoke of the scolding he got before he came away from the honest butler, whose punctilio he had most barbarously wounded.

THE LOST COIN.

The back porch and shed were being torn down. They were old and clumsy, a staggering line of white joined to a colonial house. The space where they had stood would be so much better used in an old-fashioned garden. Mrs. Emery and Winnifred stood near by, watching the work.

"This is where great-grandmother used to play, wasn't it, mother?" asked the little girl.

"Yes," answered Mrs. Emery, "She often told me about her playhouse here, and her dollies that were made of corn-stalks."

The old steps fell away with a crash, and mother and daughter stepped back out of the way of dust and splinters. When the air was clear again Winnifred, seeing something gleaming dully, jumped down and picked up—a ten-cent piece!

"Look, mama!" she cried. "Isn't it a queer dime? It's"—she looked closer—"18 and—1830. I never saw one so old as that."

Mrs. Emery took the coin from Winnifred's hand and turned it over with interest.

"Yes, 1830," she said. "Why, Winnie, I do believe this is 'the ten-cent piece that never was spent!"

Winnifred stared in amazement, and her mother went on;

"I've often heard grandma—your great-grandmother—tell about it. She was ten then, and the dime was very bright and shiny. Her brother had given it to her as his birthday gift. Ten cents meant a great deal in those days, for a boy on a newly settled farm didn't have too many pennies to burn holes in his pockets. Great-grandmother was standing at the edge of the porch, wondering what she should buy with it, and she had just made up her mind to get a Dutch dolly, not a pretty one like your Greta, but a stiff, jointed wooden one, with staring eyes, and oh, such red cheeks! She had even named her Araminta, and planned all her summer dresses, when the money seemed to jump from her hand and hide itself under the porch floor. How she did cry, poor little great-grandmother! But the coin never rolled out, and although her father bought her that same Dutch dolly later, she always wanted her shiny silver money. She used to call it 'the ten-cent piece that never was spent,' and tell us that it was waiting for us."

"And it had to wait until I came, mama!" cried Winnifred. "I want to keep it."

"You shall, Winnie," said Mrs. Emery. "I'll have it polished and engraved with great-grandmother's initials,—yours, too, you know, for she was another Winnifred Patten Emery,— and made into a pin for you to wear. Then it will truly be as if she had found it and spent it for a present for her little namesake."—Youths' Companion.

FOUND QUICK CURE AFTER EIGHT YEARS

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS TRIUMPH WHERE BELTS AND PLASTERS FAIL.

Moses Sherwood, a long sufferer from Backache, found permanent relief in one box of the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Poodiac, King's Co., N. B., Jan. 9 (Special).—After suffering for eight years, while all the time the remedy was right at hand, Mr. Moses Sherwood, a well known farmer living near here, tried Dodd's Kidney Pills and is now as well as ever he was in his life.

Mr. Sherwood's experience is similar to that of thousands of other natives of New Brunswick. "About eight years ago I hurt my back from lifting," he states. "I used liniments and plasters and wore a wide belt, but in two years my trouble had developed into Kidney disease.

"My back was so sore I could not lift any weight, when reading a Dodd's Almanac led me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. Before the first box was finished my backache was gone and I have never been troubled with it since."

Belts and plasters may give temporary relief in cases of Backache or Rheumatism, but the only way to cure them is to go to the seat of the trouble. Cure the Kidneys and the Backache or Rheumatism will disappear. Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure the Kidneys.

Staylate—Has your father any objection to my paying you visits, Miss Brightly? Miss B. (glancing at the clock)—I think he would prefer that you paid them in instalments, Mr. Staylate.

While more prevalent in winter, when sudden changes in the weather try the strongest constitutions, colds and coughs and ailments of the throat may come in any season. At the first sight of derangement use Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Instant relief will be experienced, and use of the medicine until the cold disappears will protect the lungs from attack. For anyone with throat or chest weakness it cannot be surpassed.

Repentance makes restitution; remorse is sorry, but keeps the goods.

A "RHINO" CONCERT.

Held in the Depth of the African Wilderness.

The rhinocerous, although he may vocalize without much art or refinement, at least performs with an energy and abandon which would please those music-lovers who enjoy so boisterously the frantic bellowings of the true tenore robusto. Lieutenant-Colonel Patterson, after travelling through the African wilderness, wrote a book about his trip, entitled "In the Grip of the Nyika." In it he tells how he was once awakened from sleep at midnight by a most terrific din coming from the direction of a water-hole some two hundred yards away. He decided to see what the disturbance was about.

We stalked cautiously and carefully among the rocks, with the wind in our favor, until at last we were able to look over the edge of a crag down into a ravine at our feet.

The weirdest sight I ever expect to see suddenly unfolded itself beneath my astonished gaze. No fewer than sixteen rhinos were gathered together, close by, all roaring at each other, and struggling and fighting in their efforts to get at the water-hole.

The moon was shedding a brilliant luster all round, and everything was peaceful except at this one spot, where pandemonium reigned. I stood perfectly fascinated, and from the rocks where I took up my position watched the ungainly brutes with the deepest interest for a couple of hours.

I was not more than ten yards from the nearest of them, and those farthest away were not thirty yards off; but they were so busily occupied with their own affairs that they remained quite unconscious of my proximity.

Two of them, especially, amused me very much. One, who was evidently a bully, took up his position stolidly at the water-hole, and would not budge an inch. Then a second came and stood opposite to him, and proceeded to give him a piece of his mind. The bully, of course, answered back, and there they both stood for quite a long time, with their mouths wide open, roaring bad rhino language at each other for all they were worth.

The others, which were waiting for their turn to have a drink, joined in the discordant chorus from time to time.

I could easily have picked off half a dozen of them with my rifle, and some of them had very fine horns; but of course I had no intention whatever of molesting them. They were much more interesting alive than dead, and I never for a moment entertained the thought of disturbing their concert by firing my rifle.

WHAT A C.P.R. FIREMAN OWES TO ZAM-BUK

"George H. Duffus of Robertson St., Fort William, a C. P. R. fireman, says: "The water gauge of my locomotive burst and scalded the whole left side of my face terribly. I had a box of Zam-Buk in my pocket, which I was using for a sore on my lip, and when I had recovered from the first shock of the accident, I produced the balm and had it applied freely to the scalded parts. I was suffering acute agony, but within a wonderfully short time Zam-Buk gave me ease. I was able to continue my journey and upon reaching home, I obtained more Zam-Buk and continued the treatment. Zam-Buk acted wonderfully well, and in a few days had the wound nicely healing. I don't know anything so fine as Zam-Buk as a healer of burns, scalds, cuts, and similar injuries, which workers are so liable to, and, in my opinion, a box of Zam-Buk should be kept handy in every worker's home."

Zam-Buk will also be found a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, ulcers, blood-poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises, and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c. box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, on receipt of price.
