LUNG TROUBLE

Mrs. Biny Brown, of Tenecape, N.S., Was Cured by Catarrhozone of Lung Trouble and Catarrh, After Hundreds of Other Remedies Failed

If your lungs are weak; if there is consumption in your family; if Colds, Catarrh, and Bronchitis bother you, be sure to use Catarrhozone It is especially adapted for these diseases and cures every time

Mrs. Brown took cough mixtures, but they made her sick. Then she used an atomizer, but, after resorting without benefit to poultices, she tried Catarrhozone.

"I used Catarrhozone Inhaler," writes Mrs. Brown, "five minutes every hour, and soon recognized that it was going to cure me. I could feel the soothing medicated air spreading through the air passages of the throat, and it touched the sore spots in the lungs that other remedies failed to reach. Catarrhozone seemed to go just where it was needed most, and soon put a stop to my cough. It restored me to perfect health, and I am convinced that no cough, cold, or catarrh can exist if Catarrhozone is used."

No treatment is so clean, so pleasant, so certain to cure as Catarrhozone. By means of the Inhaler, the local symptoms, such as coughing, inflammation and congestion are speedily corrected. Ferrozone tablets, which are taken after each meal, purify and cleanse the blood of all poisons, and build up and strengthen the system.

This local and constitutional treatment is always effective, and cures cases that have been given up as hopeless. Money can't buy or produce anything better, and to get cured it is absolutely necessary to use Catarrhozone.

THE KING AS A LADY.

When King George Lost the Handkerchief That Classified Him.

From the "fixtures" that have been made already it becomes more and more apparent that this is going to be a "dancing season," as King George and Queen Mary themselves are very fond of dancing.

King George in the lancers recalls a very merry dance when His Majesty was Duke of York. It was at Malta, and a dance was organized, literally on the spur of the moment, on board one of the ships. The duke was always willing to join in anything that promised a bit of fun, so in "record time" a ball room was rigged up on the quarterdeck. It was agreed, since there was not a girl in the whole party, that those who were to take the ladies' parts should wear white handkerchiefs on their left sleeves.

Presently a "lady" approached the present King, and with what was meant to be a demure simper asked for the pleasure of a dance.

"Go away, you juggins," was the royal retort; "I'm a 'lady' myself, but I've lost my blessed handkerchief. Have a cigar?"

Another amusing story, in which Queen Mary figured, is recalled. It was at a state ball at Buckingham Palace a few years ago The late Prince Francis of Teck, the Queen's brother, went up to a scion of a noble house, and, remarking that he was not dancing, asked if he could find him a few partners.

"No, thanks, old chap," was the reply, as the man stifled a yawn; "dancing is such a bore, I think I will rest a little longer."

Presently the man in question—he is now a full-fledged peer—ventured to appoach the present Queen, and request the honor of a dance. Her brother "Frank," however, had been before him.

"Thank you," was the reply of the Queen, with a cool glance at him, "but dancing is such a bore, is it not?"

His lordship went home.

Florence Nightingale Statue.

The memorial in England to Florence Nightingale is to take the form, first of a statue to be placed where all may see it, perhaps in Pall Mall, opposite to the Crimean Memorial; next, of a fund to provide annuities (to be known as Florence Nightingale annuities), for trained nurses who, while devoting the best years of their lives to following their vocation, have been unable to provide adequately for their old age or infirmity. Their Majesties the King and Queen have graciously given their approval to this fund. Subscriptions may be sent to Mr. G. Q. Roberts, at St. Thomas' Hospital, London. At almost the same time, a mural tablet is to be erected to the memory of the late Florence Nightingale in the Cloisters of Santa Croce, at Florence. It may be remembered that Florence Nightingale was named Florence because she was born in that city, and the house in which she was born, the Villa Colombia, still stands there; it is owned by Herr von Kaufmann, who has given his consent to have a tablet set up over the door in memory of the event.

Suitor Has Disappointment.

The Marquis of Northampton, who has celebrated his sixty-first birthday, is a Knight of the Garter, and one of the biggest landlords in London, owning extensive properties in the Clerkenwell district. He is well-known as a philanthropist, and takes great interest in various religious enterprises. He is not fond of politics, but is a keen student of the social problems of the day, and is an accomplished musician and a great lover of art.

The marquis is a widower, his wife, who was a daughter of the second Lord Ashburton, having died in 1902. It is said that this lady might have contracted an alliance with a member of the royal family, and Queen Victoria was supposed to have interested herself in the matter, but her affection for the future Lord Northampton overcame all else, and they were happily married in 1884.

Castle Ashby, Northampton, one of his lordship's country seats, is a magnificent place, famed for its library and collection of family portraits.

Bricks They Use In London.

Something less than a century ago there used to be a tax on building bricks in England, and in order to evade it the bricks were made of larger and larger sizes. These were used for cellars and other concealed places. To stop this fraud an act was passed in the reign of George III. fixing the legal size of bricks. Early in Queen Victoria's reign the tax was taken off, and bricks may now be legally made of any size whatever. But any change from the standard size would bring about great inconvenience. All calculations are made for building on this standard size, and the London building acts have practically fixed it at 9 by 4 1-2 by 3 for all time.—London Standard.

Will Be Grand Affair.

The ball which the Duchess of Sutherland will give in June will be a very important social function, for the King and Queen have notified their intention to be present. For this reason the ball, which is to celebrate the debut of Lady Rosemary Leveson-Gower, the only daughter of the Duke and Duchess, is to take place on the night following the Coronation Day, instead of Coronation Day itself, as at first contemplated. Most of the royal and other distinguished guests then in England are expected to be present.

Manuel Plays Golf.

King Manuel of Portugal, who now, it will be remembered, lives at Richmond, has developed a great liking for golf, and plays on the Mid-Surrey Club links. He also goes in for rowing. He is extremely nice to all with whom he is brought into contact, so it is said, and is very popular.

Two of a Kind.

"Oh, George," sighed the lovesick maiden, "I'm sure I'm not worthy to be your wife."

"Well," replied George wearily, "I'm not worthy to be your husband, so we're just about matched."

A COUNCIL OF SEVEN

SOMETHING ABOUT THE BIG MEN AT SCOTLAND YARD.

Great Detective Establishment Which Operates From a Gloomy Office In London the Police Machinery Which Is a Terror to Crooks, Is Ruled by Sir Melville MacNaghten, Aided by Six Specialists In Crime.

In the great, rather grim, red-brick building which, like a medieval fortress, dominates the Thames within a stone's throw of the Houses of Parliament, there is a large, barely-furnished room which holds more secrets than any other in London, with the possible exception of the room of Cabinet mysteries. It is the nerve centre of our great and complex detective system, which controls the currents radiating all the world over for the discovery of crime; and it is in this secret chamber that the mysterious Council of Seven hold their meetings to unravel the tangled skeins of tragedy.

This council has not long been in existence; in fact, it is practically unknown to the outside world. It is only a short time since it occurred to the authorities of New Scotland Yard that, in place of casual conferences between detectives engaged in the solution of some problem of crime, it would be well to appoint a body of their cleverest detectives — men of acute and astute brains, with long experience of crime and criminals—to combine their efforts in solving the principal mysteries; and, as might be expected, the plan has worked admirably.

The greatest care has naturally been taken in choosing men for this responsible work. It was important that the council should, as far as possible, cover the whole range of crime. The detective who has specialized in murder or burglary may know little of, say, coiners and begging-letters imposters, and thus the leading expert in each of the principal branches of crime was chosen — men who know practically all that is to be known about their own branch and its professors, and whose names even are a terror to evil-doers the whole world over.

But let us see how this council works. Suppose that a mysterious murder has taken place in London. Within a few minutes after it has been reported to the nearest police station the detective inspector and his assistants are on the spot making investigations. Meanwhile the news has been flashed to New Scotland Yard; and almost before the local men have well commenced their inquiries a member of the council—the man whose special province it is—appears on the scene and takes charges of the operations.

If the problem is a fairly simple one, as it often is, and the murderer is speedily run to earth, the services of the council are naturally not required. But if there is no sufficient clue to the assassin, or he has made his escape good, the council is at once summoned, and takes the case in hand.

And who are the members of the secret council? Naturally, they vary from time to time, due to retirements and other causes, but the principal members have so far remained the same. The head of the council is, by virtue of his office, Sir Melville Macnaghten, chief of the Criminal Investigation Department — a man who probably knows more about crime than any other in the United Kingdom.

Few men look less like a catcher of criminals than Sir Melville, who suggests rather a prosperous and genial stockbroker than a Sherlock Holmes; but, all the same, he is an expert in crime to the tips of his fingers. Apart from his long experience of crime and its professors, he is a born detective, if ever there was one. So intuitively clever is he that it is said he can tell, after a few minutes' conversation with a criminal, of what particular branch he is a specialist, and his resource and tenacity are just as wonderful as his instinct for discovering clues.

After Sir Melville, who controls the council, its principal member is Superintendent Forest, whose fame and prowess as a detective are world-wide. As a sleuth-hound of justice he has won laurels in every part of the world—from North America to Australia, and from California to Spain. There is scarcely a criminal in Europe who does not know of and dread him.

Another valuable member of the council, entitled, perhaps, to rank next to this terror to criminals, who, by the way, is one of the most amiable and genial of men, with a ready smile and laughing blue eyes, is Chief Inspector Dew, who has figured so prominently in the Crippen case.

Among other recent and present members of the council is Chief Inspector Drew, tall, debonair, gentlemanly, and a past-master of disguises—who has made a special study of the sharpers of all kinds of Europe and America; and who, in a variety of characters, ranging from a milkman to a Piccadilly lounger, has made many notable captures of criminals.

Others are Chief Inspector Collins, an expert in the lower walks of crime, to whom the slums of London are an open book; Chief Inspector Kane, quiet-mannered, but "sharp as a needle" and as tenacious as a bulldog—when once his "teeth are in" he never lets go; and Chief Inspector Scott, a man of rare organizing talent and the widest knowledge of crime, who is noted for carrying out successfully any task he undertakes.

Booth's Rules.

General Booth gives the following as his rules for long life: eat little, drink water, take exercise, have a system, take pleasures wisely, avoid excess of all kinds, aim high.

Elgar's Hobbies.

Sir Edward Elgar, the famous composer, is an ardent naturalist, and at one time made a hobby of making and flying kites.

Two Years for Perjury

On the evening of the 27th of June, Ernest Williams, an English boy of 16 years, was left in charge of the farm of Mr. William Bloake, for whom he worked. Mr. Bloake lives near Thornton, and all the family were away this evening. When they returned Williams told a sensational story of two burglars entering the house and of shooting at them as they were fleeing. He even described the supposed burglars, saying they were two phrenologists who were working the district.

Acting on this information sent to Crown Attorney Cotter, Detective A. W. Beardsley went to Braden's settlement, between Thornton and Allston, and arrested the two men described. When confronted with the charge of burglary they asserted that the affair was a joke and hastened to prove an alibi. They had supper at Mr. Cochrane's on the 27th of June and never left his place all evening. Mr. Cochrane supported the men and they were released. Williams then confessed that the whole story was concocted by himself to cover up an attempted burglary by himself.

He was arrested and appeared before Judge Wismer on the charge of perjury, the sentence being two years, less a day, in the Central prison, with an order to deport him when his time is served—Collingwood Bulletin.

STATUE TO COOK.

Australians Will Erect Memorial to Discoverer of Continent.

Really great Englishmen have usually to wait a long time after they are dead before a worthy national memorial is erected to commemorate their exploits in the most fitting location, the heart of the metropolis.

Shakespeare still lacks a statue in London, though the memorial theatre that is to be raised in his honor will remedy that omission. And great English navigators have been as much overlooked as great dramatists and authors.

Although Captain Cook gave Australia and New Zealand to Britain, and the story of his voyages has delighted generations of youngsters, London only has a portrait medallion of him on the walls of the Colonial Office, and a tablet on a house in the Mile End road to record that the great explorer and his wife lived there.

Three years ago Sir J. H. Carruthers, ex-Prime Minister of New South Wales, started an agitation for the erection of a worthy monument to Cooks memory. In due course the matter was brought to the notice of the British Empire League, and a committee was formed with the object of collecting subscriptions for this purpose, King George, then Prince of Wales, closely associating himself with the effort. Only those who have had such a project in hand know how difficult it is in England to raise funds for a memorial of this nature.

Now a site has been chosen, and Sir Thomas Brock, the sculptor of the Victoria Memorial, has been commissioned to make the statue. When finished, it will be erected on the Mall, close to the new Admiralty Arch, on the left hand, looking toward Buckingham Palace.

But Cook was not without honor in his own day. Benjamin Franklin, it may be remembered, ordered the American privateers to "show him every respect, and permit him to pass unattacked on account of the benefits he has conferred on mankind." A statue to Cook is a necessary act of national recognition, although, as an English naval historian has said, "his truest and best memorial is the map of the Pacific."

Cromwell's Skull.

The Bessborough earldom was created in 1739, and the present holder of the title is the eighth of his line; is sixty years of age, and succeeded his father in 1906.

His lordship served in the navy, retiring as a lieutenant in 1874. Five years later he was called to the Bar, and was secretary to the Speaker of the House of Commons from 1884 to 1895, and also secretary to the Caledonian Canal Commissioners from 1896 to 1899.

Lord Bessborough has told a story of a showman at a village fair. He was exhibiting some curiosities, and among them was a skull which he declared to be the skull of Oliver Cromwell.

A gentleman standing by said it could not be so, for Cromwell had a very large head, and this was a small skull.

Thereupon the crowd began to laugh at the showman, but without being in the least disturbed, he said: "Oh, I know that, but you see this is his skull when he was a boy!"

Lady Bessborough was Miss Blanche Guest, and is sister to Lord Wimborne. She is given to charitable enterprise, and is serious-minded. The inception and advancement of Irish home handicraft is the main object of her life, and the Garry Hill Cottage Industry presents proof of much successful endeavor. As Lady Duncannon she started a shop near Bond street for the sale of these products, and her name, "Viscountess Duncannon," appeared in large gilt letters over the doorway.

Yorkshire's Strong Man.

George Hirst is one of the greatest of modern all-round cricketers. Recently he took nine Worcester wickets for forty-one runs and followed up this bowling feat by scoring a century. Not a bad performance for a man in his fortieth year, who has been playing first-class cricket for nearly twenty years. Hirst is one of the most popular figures in the cricketing world, and everyone was delighted when, in 1904, he had a record benefit which brought him in $17,500, part of which he invested in a toffee factory, which is doing a big business. An amusing incident occurred at Bramall Lane some time ago. A strong wind was blowing the bails off when Hirst was batting. "Stick them on with your toffee, Garge!" yelled one spectator. And genial George smiled all over his face.

An amusing incident took place at the C. P. R. station on Monday when on the arrival of the express a well dressed lady emerged from a coach, and another on the platform ran gushingly to greet her. Both ladies were dressed in the height of fashion, and strange to say, both wore large picture hats. At any rate they tried to kiss, but the problem was a difficult one. There seemed for a few seconds to be a clinch, then they broke away and blushing furiously, went at it again. Finally they succeeded by tilting their heads slightly backwards and downwards till the brims of the two hats stood opposite to each other in almost the same place. The faces were then cautiously advanced, great care being taken however not to allow the brims of the hats to clash at any point. Consequently the proper angle was reached so that the space between the faces became infinitesimal and the daylight showing between was reduced to a mere crack, the lips were projected and the deed was done. The greatest caution was again exercised in the break away, and the ladies red and smiling sauntered off, fully conscious of the silent latughter of the on-lookers —O. S. Herald.
