Are You Weak, Bloodless, Anaemic?

You Can Be Cured of Poverty of the Blood Just Like Miss Everett Was.

Since the early ages, in all countries, among all classes of people, anaemia has been one of the most pernicious conditions that affect mankind.

Writing from her home in Paisley, Mrs. Everett says:—"My daughter had just passed her sixteenth year, when she began to rapidly lose color and strength. Serious complications set in that made her family and friends most anxious. We were not only worried on account of her ill-health, but because she was likely to lose her years' work at the High school, where she was preparing for the profession of teaching. The doctor said it was 'Anaemia.' I knew the best remedy was Ferrozone—and made my daughter take two Ferrozone Tablets with every meal. The first box did little more than increase her appetite. But with the second box it was really delightful to watch the signs of returning health. Annie's face became sort of a yellowish at first—that deadly whiteness disappeared. But it wasn't long before a ruddy glow was perceptible in her cheeks, and real good color returned. All Annie's troubles were cured—she grew strong—vigorous—heavy in weight—feels and looks the picture of health."

Makes Strong Blood

Why I Am A Canadian

By ARTHUR HAWKES

Did it ever occur to you that there are two classes of Canadians?—those who couldn't help being Canadians and those who could. I would be very proud to belong to the couldn't-help-it class. But I belong to the other, and I would like to tell you why. I am a curiosity in patriotism. There are tens of thousands like me, most of them unrecognized. I want to find them, so that they may be encouraged to find themselves.

Patriotism? Yes, sir, Patriotism is "Home Sweet Home" on a grand scale. Listen:—

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said:
This is my own, my native land!"

Listen again:—

The centurion told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest, for this man is a Roman.

Then the chief captain came and said unto him, Tell me, are thou a Roman? He said I am.

And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, BUT I WAS FREE BORN.

There is a glory of the native born—the thrill that passes through your heart and down your spine when the sacramental element of your nativity makes its subtle, compelling appeal to your mind. I know what it is; but not in Canada. If you have it, cherish it; be exceeding glad when it comes to you. Pass it on.

To us who enjoy only the blessing of adoption, who have given our native land a second place in our affections, is there even a glory for us in Canada? Can you—the native born—tell what it is? You can't, because you haven't had our experience.

We need not envy you, the native born; you need not envy us, the British-born. We are meet for one another, to conspire to make Canada as great in reputation as she is great in extent. And so it becomes you to inquire why I am a Canadian, and to think well upon my two answers.

One.—Because you asked me to be a Canadian.

I hope to be quite humble in expanding this answer, because I've had worthy people come to me and say, "We have found that British people are not welcomed here," and because I want to speak the truth in love. Personally I have never felt the slightest sense of not being welcome in Canada. Many years ago I moved from the South to the North of England, and I felt ever so much more a stranger north of the Trent than I have ever felt north of the St. Lawrence. Very thankfully I testify that never since I landed at Quebec, twenty-six years ago, have I said a word against conditions in Canada. Never a word has been said to me personally that I could resent. But there are others.

I know a man who has become as keen a Canadian as I have, who, with his wife, began life in Ontario on a farm. They are good people, who do good to others and who are already better off than they ever hoped to be in England. They left the farm because they were continually subjected to nagging about their nationality. For the sins of others they were called "chirpers" and other names.

You asked us to come. The Government has spent millions and millions of dollars in inducing British-born people to forsake friends and homes and traditions and places consecrated by sacred dust, and help to build up Canada. The Dominion has become prosperous because the immigrant, the chirper, as well as the capitalist, has arrived. Never forget, brother, that he was besought to come by you, through such people as Lord Strathcona and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. These great men have looked for assets for Canada; for an impetus to your prosperity. Be gentle in your attitude to the people who come from the same land that your ancestors came from. Let patience have her perfect work in you, in them. Ask yourself how you would get along if you were dumped into a Yorkshire manufacturing town and sent to work in a mill, and expected to become a Yorkshireman in five or six days.

Two.—I am a Canadian because I know Canada.

They know not England who only England know. They know not Canada who only their province know. The Englishman who finds himself, say, in Southern Saskatchewan, for a year or two, and who visits the Old Country, says, "In Canada they do this and that." He will describe an ox harness, for instance. He does not know that in Nova Scotia they strap a yoke tight to the oxen's horns; and they also shoe each ox with eight iron shoes. To him the little bit of Canada he has seen is the whole of Canada.

Will you forgive me if I state the simple truth that a great deal of Canadian pride is nourished on a little knowledge of Canada. We can't all know the country, because if everybody travelled all the time there would be a standstill to industries on which the country prospers. That means that there is something of a responsibility upon those who have seen much of the country to help the less fortunate to realize what a noble country it is, and what a wonderful future it may make its own.

It was by a fortune I never deserved, that I went through the mill of pioneering in the West between 1885 and 1891, and that, after fourteen years' absence I came back, journeyed for three months all over the country, and finally settled in Toronto; and that in six years I have travelled a hundred and forty thousand miles between Halifax and Victoria.

Of deliberate choice, then, I brought my family to Canada. They do not want to go back to the land of their birth. We do not speak of England as "home." This is our home. We want no other. Our settlement has been consecrated by the advent of a little Canadian-born girl, who began life sturdier in body than either of her sisters. She will be able to sing of Canada as her native land. I am glad of it. You see, we combine the British-born and the Native-born.

And behold it is good—very good.

RAILWAYS IN JAPAN.

Filthy Cars and Dirty Stations in a Land of Cleanliness.

"The railway journey from Kioto to Yokohama, despite the fact that most beautiful country is traversed, is not the pleasantest of experiences," declares a writer in the Wide World. "One buys a railway ticket in Japan in installments.

"The ordinary ticket only enables one to go by a train covering the minimum distance in the maximum time, so an extra express ticket is purchased, which means that the engine moves a little more quickly toward its appointed goal.

"Next a platform ticket must be procured to enable one to board the train, and finally one has to fight one's way into a first class carriage. Why do all the passengers in Japan take their luggage into the already painfully small carriage instead of leaving it in the van? And why, again, does a nation that is a password for cleanliness the world over possess a train service so shockingly dirty in every detail?

"We once in a weak moment looked into a station master's room at a large station, and for pure dirt it could have given points to a dust heap. In the train carriages the floors are covered with the dirt of ages, cigarette ends, orange peel, sandwich papers. At intervals a porter saunters in with a brush and leisurely sweeps all the refuse into a corner, having first carefully closed every window, so that no atom of discomfort or infection shall be lost.

"Finally he departs, leaving behind him the rubbish and an atmosphere charged with germs and angry words. Truly a Japanese porter's definition of clearing up is removing rubbish from one place to another."

A TURKEY FEAST.

General Lee Showed His Officers the Way to Enjoy It.

General Lee in the drawing room was a dignified and quiet gentleman, very kindly and gentle, especially with women and children. "On the field," says Major Ranson in Harper's Magazine, "he was the general, the commander in all essential points. But in other points he could be as sympathetic and considerate as he was at home.

"In the latter part of December a barrel was delivered at our camp marked 'General Lee and Staff.' We opened it and found it was packed full of turkeys. We sent word to General Lee, and he rode over to our camp. There was snow on the ground, and we had laid the turkeys out on a board on the snow, the biggest in the middle and the others tapering off to the smallest at each end. There were about a dozen of them.

"General Lee dismounted and joined the group gathered round the present, carrying his unslung and undrawn sword in his hand. He was told that the big turkey in the middle was his. He stood looking down at the turkeys for a moment and then said, touching the big turkey with the scabbard of his sword:

"'This, then, is my turkey? I don't know, gentlemen, what you are going to do with your turkeys, but I wish mine sent to the hospital in Petersburg so that some of the convalescents may have a good dinner.'

"He then turned on his heel and, walking to his horse, mounted and rode away. We looked at one another for a moment and then, without a word, replaced the turkeys in the barrel and sent them to the hospital."

Gilbert's Witty Comment.

Sir W. S. Gilbert's wit and humor were always ready. He was a fine raconteur and a good after dinner speaker. Rutland Barrington, the old Savoyard, said that "staying in Gilbert's house was like living in a literary fireworks factory."

Barrington played the Captain in "Pinafore." At rehearsal one day Gilbert, who was an autocratic and magnificent stage manager, told him to cross the stage, which represented the deck of H. M. S. Pinafore, and sit on a skylight "in a pensive attitude." Barrington obeyed orders, but unfortunately the skylight had only been rigged up temporarily, and the portly Barrington crashed through it.

"That's an ex-pensive attitude," said Gilbert in a flash.

Wanted to Convert Utopia.

When the "Utopia" was first published it occasioned a pleasant mistake This political romance represents a perfect but visionary republic in an island supposed to have been somewhere in the Atlantic, near these western shores.

"As this was the age of discovery," says Granger, "the learned Budaeus and others took it for genuine history and deemed it expedient to send missionaries thither to convert the people." —"Book of Queer Things."

Chattel Mortgages.

A man who gives a chattel mortgage should always examine it carefully to make sure it is not "on demand." Sharp money lenders who loan funds on chattel mortgages often try to have this clause inserted, and when it is the borrower may expect to part with his chattels at almost any moment. It is a trick by which advantage is often taken of the unwary.

On the Fence.

"Are you an optimist or a pessimist?"

"Both. I hope for the best, but I don't bet on it as a sure thing."—Exchange.

To live long it is necessary to live slowly.—Cicero.

II.

Canadian Nationality In Double Harness

By ARTHUR HAWKES.

You cannot wisely consider Canadian nationality without keeping in the front of your mind the division of Canadians into those who couldn't help being Canadians and those who could—the native-born and the immigrant.

Don't be scared by the immigrant. It is bad for you and worse for him. And don't think you know all about the immigrant host and their country just because you hired a green Englishman from a city, who didn't know how to put a collar on a horse.

Perhaps you never saw a Doukhobor, or a Galician, or a Buckowinian, or a Ruthenian. Thousands of these people, scattered over the prairies are Canadian citizens just as much as you are, you lucky great-grandson or great-granddaughter of a United Empire Loyalist.

They will vote on Reciprocity two thousand miles from where you are. One of these days a full-blooded Doukhobor will sit in the House of Commons. I have an excellent friend in the Saskatchewan Legislature—a Ruthenian—who couldn't speak a word of English a few years ago. It isn't far, you know, from the Assembly to the Commons. The Chairman of the Licensing Commission of the Province of Saskatchewan is a German who came from the Fatherland to Minnesota, was naturalized and elected a senator, left Minnesota for Saskatchewan, and was naturalized again.

The largest place of public assembly in Port Arthur is owned by Icelanders. In Vancouver I could take you to a Chinese theatre where two performances daily are given. The Jap is almost as numerous as the Chinaman in the salmon fisheries of British Columbia. The Hindoo's turban has become a commonplace on the Pacific Coast.

Down in Nova Scotia travellers not infrequently hear people speak of going to Canada, when they mean another province in the confederation of which Nova Scotia has been a constituent for forty years. On the prairies you will find a foreign flag exalted, I had almost said worshipped, in uncounted homes. At Red Deer, in deference to foreign sentiment, they stopped singing songs in harmony with the flag that has these thousand years braved the battle and the breeze. Canadian nationality is marching in double harness, with these imported elements in the team.

I tell you Canada is infinitely more than an Ontario concession line, a little red school house and a Loyal Orange Lodge. What is to be done about the amazing medley of kindreds and tribes and tongues which I have hinted at, and for which the Bible Society prints the Scriptures in seventy different languages?

And, mind you, there is more than the differences of race and language between you and your fellow-citizen from the South of Europe who flourishes alongside the South Saskatchewan. He comes from a country you never saw to a country you have never seen, and he knows nothing of the distinctions of the country you inhabit. The prairie country and the mountains are apt to produce people different in their make-up from the dwellers in the east.

A high railway official who came east two years ago, had never seen apples growing on the trees. The non-English speaking people who have come to the country where he was born are twice as unfamiliar with the east as he was. It is something of a job in Canadian development to get all these people up there to live like you live, think like you think, and see things as you see them. And they are Canadians with full rights—citizens. Their children are the native-born, even as your children are. What do you think about it?

What ground can we line them up on so that they will stand where we stand, and be governed by the same well-springs of patriotism that move us? You perceive it must be broad ground on which to stand, and a big, high ideal at which to look. And don't forget this—the imagination of their children must be nurtured. How can anything be accomplished in face of the tremendous differences between them and us?

Somehow, soon, we have got to get all Canadian citizens thinking about the same thing. We have got to have a common ideal about our country—their country, speakers of broken English; owners, absolute owners of Canadian soil, that they are. They must be helped to become good Canadians.

But what is a good Canadian? Answer me this—What do you mean when you stand up and sing "God save the King"? The King is on the other side of the ocean, and you perhaps are a thousand miles from salt water. On the other side of the world people are singing "God save the King" exactly as you sing it. What have you to do with them? What have they to do with your Buckowinian fellow-citizen over on the Saskatchewan?

It is a mighty curious thing this Canadian nationality in the progress of which you have harnessed yourself with the crowd of aliens to your ideas who have come to the Dominion from all the corners of the earth. You are sure about your own Canadianism. But what about theirs? It is up to you; for you asked them to come in, you know.

Suppose you talk it over with those Scotch and English fellows of your acquaintance. And ask your Irish friend to talk about it.

The report of the Canadian Forest Convention at Quebec has just been issued, and makes a volume of 160 pages, of addresses, papers, and discussions by Canadian and United States authorities on forestry and lumbering. All parts of Canada are embraced in the report, and all phases of the subject, commercial, administrative, and protective are dealt with. The resolutions passed and changes suggested in the laws are included. Persons interested may receive a copy free upon application to the Secretary, Canadian Forestry Association, Canadian Building, Ottawa, Canada.

"Marvelous Recovery"

Montreal Man So Ill With Dyspepsia Thought He Would Die.

No more convincing evidence was ever put on paper than the following letter from one of Montreal's well-known citizens. Mr. D. R. Larose, of 338 Joliette street.

"Permit me to write you a few words concerning Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I suffered from dyspepsia and indigestion for five years. I suffered so much that I could hardly attend to my work. I was weak and lost all courage. I enjoyed no rest until I decided to follow your treatment, after having read your advertisement in the paper. To my great surprise I immediately began to feel better. I am now using the second box and I feel so well that I want to tell you that I owe this great change to your famous pills. I recommend them to every person who is suffering from dyspepsia. Your grateful servant, D. R. Larose, 338 Joliette st., Montreal, P.Q.

Let all who have weak stomachs, and those who suffer with indigestion, headaches, biliousness, know they can be perfectly cured by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Successfully used for many years, mild and safe, 25c per box, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

A Washless Washboard.

"Women haven't the artistic temperament," complained the orchestra musician to the Cleveland Plain Dealer. "That's why I am unmarried. Oh, yes, I was married once. I thought to acquire a woman who could take care of my home, make a little domestic place of refuge for me and all that, but the dream soon fled.

"A few days after I was married my bride came to me and said: 'Dear, that new washboard you got for me is no good at all. I can't wash your socks on it.'

"'Washboard!' says I. 'Why, I never bought you a washboard.' But she led me out into the kitchen and showed me what she'd been scrubbing away on all the morning. Great heavens! It was my new xylophone."

Rebuking an Emperor.

Once, so the story goes, Emperor Nicholas of Russia asked Liszt to play in his presence. The musician complied, but during the performance the czar started a conversation with an aid-de-camp. Liszt stopped playing at once. The czar asked what was the matter. "When the emperor speaks," said Liszt, "every one must be silent." The czar smilingly took the hint, and the playing proceeded.
