REBUKED AN EMPEROR.

Gluck Didn't Like the Way Joseph II. Sang His Music.

Gluck, the composer, was not of the sort of men of whom courtiers are made. One day he attended at the court at Vienna a concert at which the Emperor Joseph II. and one of his archdukes sang a fragment from one of Gluck's compositions. Naturally enough, the imperial artists glanced at the composer to see how he was impressed by the honor they were doing him. They were shocked to observe that he was making a series of extraordinary and significant grimaces. The emperor stopped and inquired whether he and the archduke were not singing the bit according to Gluck's idea of how it should be done.

"My idea!" exclaimed Gluck. "Why, sire, I am the poorest walker in the world, but I would vastly rather take a walk of six leagues than be forced to hear a composition of my own interpreted in such a way as that."

Joseph II. was brave enough to take no notice of the criticism, but the court was quite convinced that if such a reproach had been addressed to the Czar Nicholas the composer would have prosecuted his musical studies from that time forth under the unfavorable surroundings of the Siberian mines.

It was the composer Weigl, a man of very different temperament from Gluck, who when the Emperor Francis Joseph played the first violin in the performance of one of his overtures threw himself at the monarch's feet and exclaimed, "Ah, sire, will your majesty benignantly condescend to grant my prayer and favor me once more with a most gracious F sharp?"—New York Press.

GUARDING A SECRET.

The Number of Persons Who May Share It With Safety.

In the realm of the multiplication table, where, for example, two and two can be relied on to make exactly four, reckoning is easy, but when you leave the field of abstract numbers and deal with persons strange results sometimes appear. Such a case is described in Lady Dorothy Nevill's book, "Under Five Reigns."

With regard to the number of persons who may safely be trusted with a secret, there is no proverbial authority for believing it to exceed two. We are told in several languages that "the secret of two is God's secret, the secret of three is all the world's," and the Spaniards say, "What three know all the world knows."

A gentleman who had gained possession of a valuable commercial secret confided it to a friend who appreciated its value. A short time afterward this friend came to ask permission to communicate it, under oath of eternal secrecy, to a friend of his who would be likely to assist in utilizing the secret to the best advantage.

"Let me see," said the original possessor of the secret, making a chalk mark on a board at hand. "I know the particulars. That makes one."

"One," agreed his friend.

"You know them," continued he, making another mark by the side of the one already made. "That makes"—

"Two!" cried the other.

"Well, and if you tell your friend, that will be"—making a third mark.

"Three," said the other.

"No," was the reply—"111."—Life.

The First Society of Authors.

A society for the protection of authors was founded as long ago as 1735. Authors themselves were not members of the society, which was instituted for their benefit by noblemen and gentlemen, who subscribed 2 guineas annually in addition to an entrance fee of 10 guineas.

Their purpose, as defined by themselves, was "to assist authors in the publication and to secure to them the entire profits of their own works"—that is to say, they published books, but took no fees for doing so. They were amateurs, however, engaged in trade in competition with professionals, and their enterprise was unsuccessful. The society was wound up in 1749, and the balance in hand (£20 12s.) was presented to the Foundling hospital.—London Author.

Fled From Death.

We questioned the applicant for a position as laundress.

"Are you married?" we asked.

"No, suh; I's a widduh."

"Ah—and your husband is dead?"

"Yassuh—he's sho' daid."

"How did he meet his death?"

"Meet it? Laws, man, he didn't meet it! Dey had ter chase him two mile fo' dey all could ketch him an' put de rope roun' his neck."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Had Foresight.

"That man Mehitable married has a lot of foresight," said Farmer Corntossel.

"He looked kind of worried and scared at the weddin'," replied his wife.

"That's what makes me think he has foresight."—Washington Star.

Rev. Mr. Jones, former pastor of the Palmerston Baptist Church, is now a real estate agent in Calgary and has realized a snug fortune in the rising value of lands. In one transaction alone involving the sale of city lots, he cleaned up $20,000 to the good.

John, the little son of James Foster, of West Wawanosh, was kicked on the head by a horse on Monday evening and terribly injured. His skull was crushed in on one side like an egg shell and several square inches of bone were removed from the wound by the operating physician, Dr. Kennedy of Wingham, who was summoned by Dr. Elliott of Lucknow, to assist in the case. At the time of the accident the father was in the stall at the horse's head and the little fellow was climbing up some bars behind. Evidently the horse, a quiet animal, and used to the child, mistook him in the dark for a dog which has been in the habit of nipping the farm stock on the heels and kicked in self-defence.—Teeswater News.

A little son of Mr. Roden, three years of age, fell into the Humber at the foot of King street on Monday evening and was carried down stream with the current which was quite strong. His mother plunged into the water in an endeavor to rescue her son but was unable to reach him and had difficulty in reaching the bank herself. Mrs. R. O. Train, of Albion, who happened to be at her mother's near by, was attracted by the cries of Mrs. Roden and rushing out and along the bank waded into water to her waist and was able to secure the body of the lad as it floated by and bring it to the shore. With great presence of mind Mrs. Train held the unconscious boy head down and allowed the water to drain from his body, and Drs. Jackson and Wallace who had been summoned, arriving on the scene, by hard work resucitated the boy. It was a close call for the boy, and Mrs. Train is to be commended on her presence of mind and courage in going into the swiftly moving water to the rescue of the boy.—Bolton Enterprise.

The C. P. R. has decided to errect a big $40,000 steel bridge over the Saugeen river near the bend here, and it is expected the new structure will be completed this summer. A temporary wooden bridge to replace the one carried away by the freshets is undergoing construction, and it is thought will be ready for traffic this Thursday night.—Bruce Times.

A Discovery of Vast Importance

It Is Now Admitted That Bronchitis, Asthma, Catarrh, Coughs, and Colds Can Only Be Quickly Cured By Mixing a New Medicine With the Air You Breathe.

Scientists acknowledge that medicated air treatment is the only treatment that will cure these diseases, and that stomach medicines are worse than useless.

Catarrhozone air treatment has been found to be the most effective way to cure all diseases of the throat, lungs, and nasal passages. Its action is so prompt that in less than an hour an ordinary cold is cured, and after a more thorough use of Catarrhozone, Bronchitis, Catarrh, and all diseases of the throat and lungs are completely cured.

Catarrhozone is a very simple and powerful method of treatment. You simply breathe it through the inhaler and it immediately passes over every air cell of the throat, lungs, and bronchial tubes, curing and healing as it goes.

Catarrhozone treatment affords little drops of healing for sore places in the lungs, throat, and nasal passages.
