POSTOFFICE STORIES.

Mr. Herbert Samuel In a Reminiscent Mood.

There is no member of the House of Commons who appreciates a good story more than Mr. Herbert Samuel, British Postmaster-General, and he rarely makes a speech without including in it one or two anecdotes concerning his duties at St. Martin's le Grand. Last year, for instnace, while talking of cablegrams in the House of Commons, he related the following as an example of episcopal economy. He said there was an archbishop who had a code of his own. He cabled from abroad: "John, Epistle III., 13 and 14." His friends looked up the reference in the Bible, and found the following words:

"I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee: But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name."

In connection with the postoffice savings bank department, Mr. Samuel tells the following story. There was one depositor who had exhausted his account, but who appealed to the controller to send his account book back because it cheered him. in his poverty to see how much his deposit once had been. Another depositor wrote that, although he was a Welshman and a veteran Radical, he was respectably connected and well known for his integrity.

The best of Mr. Samuel's stories, perhaps, is the following. A woman who had to fill in a claim on behalf of a son was asked to state on a form whether she had a husband living, and her answer was, "Living, but insignificant."

The Postmaster-General, it might be mentioned, likes his little joke, and it was on the occasion of the opening of a new postoffice at Margate that he announced that on that special occasion he himself would serve the first lot of stamps, which would be sold at thirteen for a shilling. A lady at once asked for the increased number, and was served by the Postmaster-General with eleven 1d. and two 1-2d. stamps.

Another good story told by Mr. Samuel concerns an occasion when he arrived during an election campaign at a certain town to address a meeting. He was somewhat late. "I saw a working man whom I knew," says Mr. Samuel, "lounging at the doorway of the hall, while from within came a continuous and earnest bellowing. 'Do you know who's speaking?' I asked my friend. 'Or haven't you been in?' 'Oh, yes, I've been in,' said he. 'Mr. A—— is speaking.' 'What about?' I inquired. My friend sighed and shook his head. 'He didn't say,' he answered."

Got the Evidence Upstairs.

An Indian judge, when first appointed to his position, was not well acquainted with Hindustani. He was trying a case in which a Hindu was charged with stealing a nilghai. The judge did not like to betrayed his ignorance of what a nilghai was, so he said:

"Produce the stolen property."

The court was held in an upper room, so the usher gasped:

"Please, your lordship it's downstairs."

"Then bring it up instantly!" sternly ordered the judge.

The official departed, and a minute later a loud bumping was heard, mingled with loud and earnest exhortations. Nearer came the noise, the door was pushed open, and the panting official appeared dragging in the blue bull.

The judge was dumbfounded, but only for an instant.

"Ah! That will do," said he. "It is always best, when possible, for the judge personally to inspect the stolen property. Remove the stolen property, usher."

Hell, Hull and Halifax.

Halifax (Eng.), supposed to be the most wealthy and prosperous town of the north country in proportion to size, formerly possessed a curious notoriety. A clause of the "Thieves' Litany" ran: "From Hell, Hull and Halifax, good Lord, deliver us." This arose from the fact that Halifax at one time could inflict summary punishment upon anybody within a radius of nine miles who had committed a felony, especially by stealing cloth. The culprits were tried by a jury of four freeholders, and if found guilty, as generally happened, were executed with a kind of guillotine at a spot still shown in Gibbet lane.

A Dog Pepys Saw.

On Sept. 11, 1661, Mr. Pepys made this entry: "To Dr. Williams, who did carry me into his garden, where he hath abundance of grapes, and he did show me a dog that he hath to kill all the cats that come thither to kill his pigeons, and do afterwards bury them and do it with so much care that they shall be quite covered; that if the tip of the tail hangs out he will take up the cat again and dig the hole deeper. Which is very strange, and he tells me that he do believe that he hath killed above 100 cats."

Intensive Culture.

Intensive agriculture is producing some startling results in Britain. In an official account of tomato growing recently issued, it is stated that 20 acres produced over 600 tons, at a value of about $4,000 per acre, or a total of $80,000 for the crop. Even allowing for a market that precludes the entry of canning factories, which are so important a factor here, it is quite evident from these figures that the Canadian farmer is in the kindergarten class in this line of industry.

Australia's Stamp.

Australia's new stamp has a picture of a kangaroo gravely contemplating a tuft of "kangaroo grass," as the Government calls it, but scoffers say it looks more like a rabbit sticking its head out of a burrow.

Let Children Eat.

According to an English dietary expert, growing children should eat to repletion. The maxim of leaving off hungry at a meal must not be applied to them.

HE SEES FOR HIMSELF

KING GEORGE IS A BIT OF A HAROUN AL-RASCHID.

Britain's Monarch Cannot Disguise Himself and Go About But Nevertheless He Loves to See His Subjects at Work and Understand Their Needs—The Queen at Tea With Farmer's Wife.

King George is the modern Haroun-al-Raschid. Like the ruler celebrated in "The Arabian Nights," he is set upon seeing how his subjects live. He cannot disguise himself and make midnight expeditions, after the manner of the Eastern calih. Photography and the newspaper press make that impossible. Besides, at midnight there are few workers employed, and it is above all, his people at work that King George wishes to see. So in open day he goes among them, watches them at bench or loom, sees how they make iron and steel, how they get coal, how by rough and hard work with their hands they are helping to keep up the industries of England upon which the very existence of England's millions depends.

Here is something new in the annals of monarchy. No British sovereign, no sovereign of any other kingdom, no president of any commonwealth, has ever until now made a systematic effort to understand industrial processes and industrial problems by studying them on the spot. That is, of course, the only way to win any vivid knowledge of them. Print can prove anything, but can with difficulty make it live. It is intimate personal impression that kindles the imagination; and without imaginaton the dry bones of fact and figure rattle tediously in the ear.

Other rulers may have read Bluebooks about coal mines. What have they got from them, save headaches. King George goes down a coal mine. Takes a lamp and stumbles along dark roadways. Borrows a pick and learns for himself what it must mean to hew into the coalface for hours at a stretch. Other rulers may have studied reports on "Housing." The very term betrays the spirit in which they are written; shows that the matter has been taken from the free air of reality into the vapid vacuum of Parliamentary debate.

King George and Queen Mary are not content with arid details as to "cubic feet of atmosphere" or with Board of Trade "index numbers." They want to see the kind of houses in which those who do the rough hard work live. Hence their surprise visits to small houses in South Wales and South Yorkshire.

In only one case was any notice given. This was at Aberdare. It made very little difference, but it was not the King's plan. He wanted to see cottages and cottagers just as they are. Suddenly he would have his motor-car stopped. He would get out and ask the astonished owner, "May we come in?" At Slaithwaithe the washing was hung up to dry on a square frame near the ceiling (a device, I think, peculiar to the North country).

At Woodlands model village the housewife was cooking the midday dinner. At the little farm on the moors the farmer's wife was entertaining two friends at "farmhouse tea." The Queen joined them and said she thoroughly enjoyed it. And what is more the hostess and the other guests enjoyed it thoroughly too.

It is worth notice that both Slaithwaite and the moor are in a constituency which used to return a Socialist member. In South Wales, also, a visit was paid to Mr. Keir Hardie's district. Most sovereigns would have left such places severely alone. That is not King George's way, nor Queen Mary's. Just as he seized the slander which affected them both and crushed it for all the world to see, so now he went boldly among those who were supposed—quite wrongly, as the event proved—to be hostile to the institution of monarchy.

In both districts they were received not with mere courtesy but with acclamations by the whole mass of inhabitants. From politics in the party sense King George, of course, holds scrupulously aloof. But he is entitled to congratulate himself on the happy issue of his courageous resolve, and further we must be grateful to him for having settled all doubts, if any existed, as to England and Wales being unanimous in support of the institution that forms the strongest tie between the different states of the Empire.

As an endurance test, these journeys made it plain that their Majesties are, happily, very strong. It would be absurd to say they were not tired after long days of motoring, with the noise of cheering about them and with hundreds, sometimes thousands of eager eyes upon them almost all the time.

The constant bowing, and lifting of the hat must have been positively painful at the close of such a day, varied by the fatigue of going over factories (sometimes three or four). Probably these domestic tours, as we may call them, were more fatiguing than the state processions of last year. En revanche, they were more interesting, both in their incidents, homely and human, and in their entire novelty, and happily their Majesties were never overtired.

The domestic tour, as an institution marks a new stage in the development of the relations between King and people. Acting upon their own judgment and good feeling, their Majesties determined that a new departure was desirable. In the old days, when nations were perpetually at war, monarchs identified themselves with the national life by leading our armies to battle. Now that peace is the settled state, only at intervals broken in upon rudely by the clash of arms, other means must be sought.

Sovereigns must place themselves, as it were, at the head of the armies of industry. They must encourage their peoples forward along paths of progress other than those which are hewn out by the sword. Nothing could more successfully draw tighter the strings of affection and loyalty than these visits.

Kimberley Budget

A severe electric storm, accompanied by heavy rain and hail passed over here on Monday afternoon. Some of the pieces of hail measured one and a half inches in diameter.

The Bell Telephone Co. are building a line from Flesherton to Kimberley.

Mr. Thos. Camack, one of our chicken cranks, has a white leghorn pullet 5 months old that has commenced laying. Beat that you chicken-hearted men.

Among those who took in the excursion to the West on the 23rd were: Mr. Fred Wickens and sister, Nell who left for Moosejaw, Sask., also Mr. Chas. Graham who left for Regina, Sask.

Mr. Robert Irwin of North Bay, who has been visiting at his parental home here, returned on Friday last.

Mr. Jno. McCallum of Vancouver, B. C., accompanied by his sister, Mrs. Wm. McKnight of Duncan, visited at Mr. J. M. Fawcett's on Sunday last.

Another one of Euphrasia's old pioneers passed away in the person of Mr. Jas. Wallace, who died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Wm. Clark on Wednesday, Aug. 21st.

Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Burrell of Sligo, visited at Mr. Neil Boyle's on Sunday last.

Miss Edith Hammond, accompanied by Miss Elvie Bishop, visited Markdale friends one day last week.

Mrs. Randall of Meaford is visiting with her brother, Mr. Geo. Proctor, at present.

Mrs. Mills and little daughter of Dundalk, visited at Mr. Oliver Irwin's the past week.

Mr. Gerald Wallace left on Monday last to take a position with the Collingwood Shipbuilding Co.

Miss Bell Duggan of Schomberg who has been visiting friends in this vicinity, returned home one day last week.

The garden party held by the Baseball Club in Mr. John Plewes' orchard on Tuesday, August 20th, was a huge success financially and otherwise. Among the sports was a baseball match between Vandeleur and Kimberley, which resulted in a victory for the former, the score being 14-9 in their favor. A concert in the evening consisting of recitations, vocal and instrumental music, etc., brought a very successful day to a close.

Mr. W. G. Weichell, (M.P., Waterloo, spent a few days fishing in the Beaver last week He has a magnetic personality and made many friends while here.

Miss Odessa Walter is visiting at W. H. Thurston's, Flesherton.

Riverdale

Gee hemlock! will it never quit raining, is the general remark of the day.

We understand that Miss Lou Wiley of this vicinity has been engaged as teacher in our public school.

The profound sympathy of the community is extended to Mr. R. Gibson and family in their pathetic bereavement

Messrs. R. Irwin of Loree and George of Goring, attended the funeral of their late sister, Mrs. R. Gibson, on Tuesday.

Mr. Fred Cutting returned home on Tuesday last, after spending several weeks vacation with friends at Gore Bay.

Mrs. J. Nesbitt of Toronto is visiting friends here at present.

A large number of Riverdale citizens will be unavoidably detained from attending the Toronto Exhibition this year, owing to procrastinated harvesting operations.

Among those from this vicinity who took their departure for the West on Friday morning were Messrs. R. Fothergill, G. Gould, H. Merrifield and G. Lee. All four are stalwart young heroes with a thorough knowledge of agricultural manipulations, the kind of men that is required, and will achieve unlimited success in the West.

Again our typical Turk of Priceville, with his tissue paper smile and one hand extended for a cordial shake, while the other firmly graspes a bowie-knife behind his back, says good bye, but ere the remark has escaped his lips, his well-known evil passions arise and despite the comprehensive intimation of The Advance editor several weeks ago. He hisses through his clenched teeth revenge, and flourishes the huge bowie-knife, crying yet again in a loud voice saying, I will dissect him. Surely this is a pathetic case of unlimited criminal ignorance and everlasting animosity. Be a hero Priceville Cor., calm your temper.

Professor Lee of the New York Institute of Science, U. S. A., and J. Boyd attended the magnificent garden party at Kimberley on Tuesday evening. The fast and furious baseball waterloo between Kimberley and Vandeleur was a scream from beginning to end, both teams showing marvellous dexterity throughout the game. An elaborate spread of delicious eats served on Mr. Plewis' lawn, attested the efficiency of the ladies of Kimberley in the culinary art, while the classical up-to-the-minute program in which those who took part acquitted themselves very meritoriously, was assuredly a corroborative instance of the talented entertaining abilities of the citizens of Kimberley.
