THE REFUND MATTER.

We were pleased with Dr. Landerkin's remarks in the Commons on Thursday last, regarding the refund of railway bonuses. as reported in the Hansard, the question having been brought up on a motion of Mr. McMullen's. During the course of his remarks the Dr. said: "The county from which I come has a perfect right to a refund of some portion of the railway bonuses which it has granted. The people of that county have not only very largely built railways for themselves, but they have contributed by taxation to the building of railways all through the Dominion, without having had any public money for railways expended there." Dr. Landerkin also shows that the county of Grey has never had "a single public building erected, or a single dollar expended by the government on railways. I believe it is the same with the county of Bruce, and I know that very little, if any, public money has been expended in North Wellington. But these sections have contributed largely to building local roads elsewhere, and I think the time has come when their claims should be considered."

While we are pleased to see the Dr. championing the cause of the county in this matter, and believing in the justice of our claim for some compensation, we would like to note that, although never having received any aid in the manner mentioned, we have in many other ways. Large sums of government money have been expended on our harbors. Our postal service has received minute attention and all our demands met in that line, so that our country is well served in that respect. The government has not been oblivious to the welfare of this county, even if they have not expended money on railways or public buildings.

While we do not believe that this county will ever have a refund of any of the money, they have the satisfaction of knowing that the withholding of this money can be used as a set off to any preposterous claims which other provinces might advance for the consideration of parliament. The agitation which has taken place on this matter will not be fruitless, even if not successful in the object aimed at, and the discussion in parliament was a fitting one to place the matter on record.

Matters at Ottawa are swimming along somewhat calmly. There has been no division taken since the formation of the new government, which consists of all the old members in their old positions. The Tarte-McGreevy case before the special committee is receiving much attention. Michael J. Connolly, the recalcitrant bookkeeper, was brought before the bar of the house and requested to explain his conduct in refusing to give up possession of the books. He apologized and gave up the key to his big chain-bound trunk. No evilence has yet been produced connecting Sir Hector Langevin in any way with any "shady" transaction, although the McGreevy's do not show up in any too enviable a light.

Since writing the above Mr. Laurier has brought on his motion of want of confidence by moving an adjournment. After speeches by members of the cabinet and many of the opposition the question was put and Mr. Laurier's motion defeated by a vote of 103 to 83, or a majority of twenty. There were eleven pairs.

If it be true that Mr. Chapleau has been prevailed on to enter the Government on condition of receiving the portfolio of his choice, after the close of the session, it is clear that the withdrawal of Sir Hector Langevin is involved. His prospective withdrawal will greatly simplify the problem for the government leaders. Sir John Macdonald's original plan of choosing ministers with particular reference to localities, so as to preserve a kind of balance of provincial power in the cabinet, has long since been lost sight of, or found impracticable, to a large extent. Yet it is obvious that beyond certain limits, local considerations cannot safely be disregarded. Everyone sees that it would never do to have both the great spending departments of the administration in the hands of representatives of Quebec. This consideration no doubt explains why Mr. Chapleau's ambition cannot be gratified at once. The rumor that Sir Hector will, at the close of the session, retire to a position of dignified rest as Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec has so much verisimilitude that we may pretty safely assume its correctness. This is, of course, on the assumption that the investigation now going on in the Committee on Privileges and Elections leaves him with unsullied reputation. His retirement will make room for an Ontario representative in the important Department of Public Works. In the meantime the Government will incur the reproach of being very partial in its distribution of offices, seeing that Ontario, the most populous and by far the richest and potentially most influential member of the Confederation, is but feebly represented in the Cabinet as now constituted. If it be true that it has been decided that Sir John Thompson shall be the nominal as well as virtual leader of the Government in the Commons, it is likely that the best arrangement possible under the circumstances has been made. Of course the test of time alone can determine the prowess of the new Administration. It is not easy to see, however, why it should not succeed in guiding the work of the session to a satisfactory ending. The severest trial of its strength will come during the recess, when its stability will be effected mainly by the results of the bye-elections, and the success or failure of the Washington conference.—[Week.
