Britain 'Quitting' India And Egypt

Britain's Present Policy Is Fulfilment Of Previous Treaty Obligations

Misrepresentations of United Kingdom policies on this continent are so frequent that it is not surprising to be told that the British Labor government is "quitting" India and Egypt because it hopes to get more trade out of both countries that way, comments the Ottawa Citizen.

"Britain is always roughly treated in these matters," said Mr. Herbert Morrison, in Ottawa recently. "Either we are guilty of hard-hearted go-getting Imperialism, or we are guilty of sloppy, too-sentimental run-away pacifism."

A corrective is in order both about India and Egypt. The truth is that ever since the First World War, successive British Governments have made it their policy to offer self-government to India. For years past all parties have agreed on that. During the Second World War the coalition government besought the various parties and communities in India to agree among themselves and take self-government on a Dominion basis. Now there is actually a Cabinet mission in India which has not only offered independence to India but has had, in default of Indian agreement, to devise the plan by means of which it may be achieved

As for Egypt, the Attlee government's policy is in direct line of the fulfilment of treaty obligations entered into by previous governments. Negotiations are now in progress for the evacuation of British troops from Egypt but this is not because of any weakness nor any neglect of the defence of the British Commonwealth. Its real reason is respect for the rights of small nations.

The Egyptian Prime Minister has already paid warm tribute to the fairness and reasonableness of the British negotiators.

THE FOUR-BILLION-$$$ JOKE

Riding high—a 1900 station wagon.

Fifty years ago, when the "horseless carriage" was born, there opened a new field for jokesters and comic cartoonists. Today in its Golden Jubilee year, the automotive industry is a $4,000,000,000 business, and the "gas buggy" is a luxurious, efficient, time-saving machine.

SPOTS OF SPORTS

By FRANK MANN HARRIS
("A Six Bit Critic")

In view of the nature of most of the front-page headlines nowadays, here's a very old yarn that might be rather timely. It's about the cloak-and-suit manufacturer who was much harassed by constant labor troubles, and finally consulted a doctor about his nerves.

* * *

"And what an ignorant boob that doctor turns out to be," he told some friends later. "I tell him my nerves are bad, so he says to me I should get interested in sport to take my mind off my troubles—advises me I should attend some ball games. So I go to the baseball park and what happens? Back of what they call the home-plate stands a big guy with a blue suit and a bird-cage over his face, and a voice you can hear for a good half-mile. And about every three seconds this big guy with the big voice hollers out 'STRIKE'—and every time he hollers out 'STRIKE' I think of my business, and my nerves jump clear through my skin. A fine doctor! Horses he should be prescribing for, or maybe goats!"

* * *

We may be wrong, as usual, but somehow we cannot help harboring the sneaking idea that the sport of baseball is heading straight for trouble—and mighty serious trouble, at that. Gambling in ball parks is steadily becoming more and more open and wide-spread, with folks betting not only on the result of the game itself, but on the outcome of practically every ball the pitcher tosses plateward.

* * *

In fact it has become so flagrant that, only recently, the gambling gentry were actually openly offering, over the loud-speaker system down in Montreal, cash bonuses for players making doubles, triples, homers and the like.

* * *

Now it stands to reason that where there is one gambler who will offer money for doing a thing—for winning—you won't have to search very hard to find another willing to pay just as much for doing just the opposite—for losing. And the natural outcome of that sort of business will be—sure as shooting—just the same kind of juicy scandal as the one which, not so many years back, shook baseball right down to the grass-roots.

* * *

That was the time when the Chicago Black Sox, of unfragrant memory—and possibly many others, as well, who wern't found out—got themselves so mixed up with the gambling element that only the appointment of old Judge Landis as absolute Tsar of the game saved baseball from a severe blackout.

* * *

A lot of the magnates who gauged—and who still gauge—the success and popularity of the sport solely and strictly by the box-office returns greatly resented the old Judge, with his dictatorial rulings, such as the one that no known professional gambler should be allowed inside a ball park. They couldn't see why they should have to turn back cash at the wickets, merely because the one proffering that cash made his living by 'laying the odds'. And so, when Landis finally passed on, they appointed in his place a man who—well, who isn't above 'listening to reason.'

* * *

Right now, of course, everything is rosy. Turnstiles are clicking more merrily than ever before—the red-ink sides of the baseball financial statements are vast expanses of blank paper—and all is for the best in the best of all possible baseball worlds.

* * *

But that doesn't say that baseball is in an invulnerable position by any means. Just one proven case of the old 'monkey-business'—just one ball-player discovered listening to the siren voice of the sure-thing gambler—and there'll be H—to pave and no cee-ment mixer handy. For, just let the cash customers once get an idea that baseball is primarily a medium for bet-making and they're liable to see it for what it really is—twenty minutes or so of excitement tedium and, for gambling purposes, stirred up in an hour-and-a half of not nearly so speedy or actionful as a pair of dice.'

Rocket Bomb Range Now 3,000 Miles

The range of the rocket bomb has increased from 200 miles to 3,000 miles following tests by the British rocket bomb mission in Australia according to unconfirmed reports from Sydney.

The mission is known to be experimenting with the rocket bomb as a potential carrier of atomic bombs.

The special British mission, which has been conducting a survey of vast uninhabited areas in Central Australia, was reported to have advised the Commonwealth government that the region would prove a satisfactory rocket testing ground.

The mission, using both jeeps and planes, began its investigation a month ago. The greatest secrecy has been attached to the operations.

Five-Day Week For U.K. Colliers?

A five-day week for British coal miners is under consideration in discussions between union officials and Emmanuel Shinwell, Minister of Fuel and Power. Mr. Shinwell was reported prepared to order what would be a revolutionary step in the industry if the union guaranteed that it would not result in decreased production.

The five-day week would be introduced as an inducement to young men to enter the mines and also as a means of eliminating much of the absenteeism plaguing the industry at present.
