A fox hunt took place not far from this village the other evening and ended up rather poorly for the hunters, who, armed with gun and shovels and crow-bar, hied to what they considered sly reynards den to dig him out. After some time spent at that laborious work one of them who was using the bar encouraged the others by telling them he was sure he could touch him with the bar and they would soon have the fox, but when they got it it proved to be a poor little bunny and they had all their hard work for nothing.

Let him who hath his plenty share,
And him who lacks, his lack.
Give, each one, what he may, nor care
What recompense comes back.
If only love his heart shall swell,
And kindness guide his hand,
His Christmas he shall keep as well
As any in the land.

Out greed! Out guile! Out jealousy!
Out envy! Out despair!
Come hope! Come faith! Come charity!
And ease the pains of care.
Come Christmas, with thy message dear,
And all thy gentle mirth,
To teach that love shall cast out fear
And peace shall reign on earth.
