MURDERS BROUGHT HOME

Three most sensational murder cases have been tried during the past week, and in each case the accused has been found guilty, In this country the Shortis case at Valleyfield, Que. has ended in a verdict of guilty. Shortis was charged with shooting a book keeper named Loy. In summing up the case the judge remarked that Shortis was a spoilt boy from boyhood and gradually developed into a self-willed monster. What a statement was this for the aged father and mother, who sat near, to listen to. They had "spoilt" their boy in early youth and he had developed into a murderer. In human judgment it is impossible to state just what amount of guilt for this murder lies at the door of the parents, but that guilt there is admits of no doubt.

Holmes, the murderer of four of the Pietzel family, has been found guilty in Philadelphia. This monster's story is one of peculiar horror. Possessed of everything that could make life a success, a brilliant mind, a powerful intellect and a medical diploma, he chose the path of crime and to hide his crime added quadruple murder, if that includes all his victims. Such criminals as Homes are rare but their fate is sure. Society will breathe freer when it knows that the rope has done its work.

The Durant case was far away in San Francisco but has created much interest here. Theodore Durant was a young medical student, who was charged with having strangled a young girl named Blanche Lamont in a church. He was also thought to have murdered another girl named Williams who was found dead in the same church. The evidence was wholly circumstantial, but he was found guilty.

The second trial of the Hyams twins for the murder of Willie Wells is in process at Toronto this week. It is expected that this case will last about two weeks.

Toronto Saturday Night calls the proposed ship canal from lake Simcoe to Toronto a "screaming farce."
