Sports-And One Thing or Another

By FRANK MANN HARRIS

The Winter Olympic Games have brought to light several highly interesting facts, a few which might be mentioned being — (a) that a boy brought up in Canada is quite liable to be a better hockey player than one who has grown to manhood in Ital (b) that countries such as Norway and Finland in some mysterious manner manage to develop more skilled skiers than lands situated in the tropics; and (c) that while it may not be absolutely essential for a champion figure skater (feminine) to have an eye-filling face and "built", still it doesn't seem to hinder any.

* * *

Now all these may be very amazing pieces of information — the sort of things nobody would have figured out by the light of pure reason, or without the proof of actual experience. Still, we doubt if they are worth all the money the Games cost, to say nothing of the backbiting, childish squabbles and ill-feeling they caused. The Swiss gentleman, who opened the proceedings by saying what wonderful things the Olympics are for "furthering International goodwill" certainly must have led a cloistered existence up to now. What a shock he's going to get when somebody tells him about the birds and bees and flowers, and other basic facts of life!

* * *

The English girl—a recent arrival to Canada — who put the blast on Toronto by calling it a "dead town" and several other unpleasant things —has been properly reproved and put in her place by the Press of that fair city, many columns of supposedly valuable newspaper space being devoted to telling her where to head in. How taken back and abashed the poor girl must have felt after reading it! Still, now we come to think of it, probably not nearly so much as she might had nobody paid her the slightest attention. As one of the greatest publicity-getters of all time used to put it, "I don't care what you say about me so long as YOU SAY SOMETHING, and get my name spelled right."

* * *

The theory that "the customer is always right can be carried too far in any line of business — and nowhere is this truer than in the business of Sport. Too much rowdyism can sicken or even kill a great sport more quickly than anything else — a shining example is Field Lacrosse — and the hockey moguls, by placing too great emphasis on the fighting qualities of their hired help, may be setting off a chain reaction that they'll someday wish they'd brought under control ere it was too late.

* * *

"A wild brawl broke out on the ice and overflowed into the rail seats as the spectators struck out at the players." "Close by a dozen players surged around shoving elbows and fists into each other's faces." "It was during this final brawl of the evening that a live bullet was flung on the ice by a spectator." These are quoted from the account of a single game taking place in Detroit not so long ago.

* * *

Now we realize that the fights which take place on the ice among hockey players are about 95% phony — a lot of grabbing, tugging and hauling that doesn't mean a thing, so far as actual damage is concerned. It's the effect, not on one another, but on the cash customers, that's important. For there's a type of sports fan who positively shouldn't be allowed to witness anything more nerve-agitating than tiddlywinks — and generally he's the type of guy with money or influence enough to wangle seats right down in front.

* * *

Spectators who take punches at enemy players have no business being at any sort of game. A man who would throw a live shell — even a .22 — would, if he happened to have one handy, heave a bomb or grenade. Yet seldom is anything done to these wild-eyed wombats, who can spoil an entire evening for everybody within hearing or seeing distance of them. You see them back in the very same seats at the very next game, carrying on in the same old way. They should, after one warning, be barred for life — or else told to confine their attentions to wrestling, where a certain amount of rowdyism among the pew-holders is part of the game.

It Wasn't Mutual

The late John Barrymore was out walking one afternoon, when he saw a certain notorious snob approaching. He tried to avoid the man, but the other singled him out with the hearty greeting: "Good afternoon, Barrymore. You are positively the only person I've met today worth stopping to speak to."

"Really?" rejoined Barrymore, "Then you're more fortunate than I am."

Preparing For a Different Sort of World—The world our children are growing into is vastly different from the one our grandparents knew—with distances shrinking daily and London, Ontario hardly a "sleeper jump" from London, England. The National Film Board picture TOMORROW'S CITIZENS is a vivid illustration of what our educational authorities are doing toward preparing our boys and girls to understand the problems which face them.

"Tomorrow's Citizens"

"Tomorrow's Citizens", a feature film on the Ontario rural film programmes this winter, is in many ways an answer to the spate of questions which has been raised ever since the first atom bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, namely, "how are we preparing ourselves for the atomic age?"

For most of us, of course, life has continued in much the same manner as it did prior to the atomic attack on Hiroshima. But, nevertheless, we are aware that a new form of energy has been released, which, combined with other scientific discoveries of the past decade, is capable of transforming the world completely — for better or worse.

For the most part, the question concerns our children and the manner in which they are being educated. Are they being made aware of the possibilities of the future?

"Tomorrow's Citizens" takes a look at the classrooms of to-day, and decides that a beginning is certainly being made. Take maps, for instance. The old public school geography book maps showed the countries and continents in a flattened out form, and you were taught to think of the distances between places in terms of railway or steamship miles. The net result was that most countries seemed remote and not worth bothering about.

New Kind Of Maps

But a revolution in map making has been under way for some years now in a quiet sort of way. Map makers like Richard Edes Harrison are featured in "Tomorrow's Citizens" as showing the world in terms of airways: the airways which in future will be travelled by jet and rocket propelled aircraft. This reduces the distances between countries very startlingly. People we thought of as living on the other side of the world are now next door neighbors.

Maps are drawn, too, from other new points of view. For instance in place of the flattened projections of the "Old World" and "New World", and the "Eastern Hemisphere" and "Western Hemisphere", we can now look at the world from the north pole, and note a new relationship between the major countries of the world. From such a map we can get an entirely different view of the geography and world relations.

What else do the children of today see in their classrooms? They are making the acquaintance of many new technical advances which are transforming the world. Of course they may not understand these all at once, but they become familiar with them. Also, they are being made aware of the communications which link one country or continent with another. Through pictures, films, and actual tours where these are possible, the children see the great ships and railways and airways which form the basis of world commerce and the interchange of ideas and customs.

Shrinking World

But there is more to the business of education to-day than this, as people who are worried about the future will maintain. Besides becoming aware of new inventions and technical processes, the citizens of the future must be given a sense of social responsibility. This is commonsense for a world that is shrinking—a world which finds all nations on each others' front and back door steps.

The Test

The family was having company for dinner. Julie, aged five, laid down her spoon, looked at her mother, and said: Mommy, there's a hair in my soup."

"Hush, dear," implored the embarrassed mother, trying to cover the situation, "it's just a crack in your plate."

Julie picked up her spoon, stirred dubiously a few times. "Mommy," she insisted, "can a kwack move?"

Voice of Experience

On a blackboard in front of a small Canadian business college the enterprising manager wrote in bold letters;

"Short course in Accounting for Women."

A little later in the day a crowd gathered before the board to read —and laugh over—a second line some knowing passer-by had added. It read:

"There is NO accounting for women."

PILES—Modern medical science has overcome ailments formerly thought impossible. Piles were considered one of them. That's nonsense today. The new Fyltone treatment has proven itself in thousands of the most stubborn cases. It gets results because it goes direct to the internal cause. Your first bottle (a liquid taken by mouth) shows you the difference, or that price refunded at once. All modern Druggists.

YOU can always profit with quality chicks. There are unusual times, but during our 24 years in the poultry business we have never seen a year when Tweddle chicks and good management didn't come out on top. The world shortage of food is alarming and the hen is a mighty important factor in this economic crisis. She is the most economical producer of meat as well as the producer of the closest thing to meat—the egg. Increased production cuts feed cost. Some of you can remember when poultry feed was dirt cheap but you had a lot of hens laying an average of only 90 eggs a year. Now, we have the 300-egg hen and lots of Tweddle customers are getting 200-egg averages and remember every extra egg cuts down the cost of feed per egg. The answer then is better poultry and hundreds of customers come back year after year to get those husky bred to lay and pay Tweddle Chicks. Send for free catalogue and pricelist. 'Hoot' Man

Now that Britain's railways are nationalized, the public wants that extra bit of service. One of the latest requests asks the engineer of the 6:20 a.m. Hastings-Ashford train:

"Would you be so good as to hoot as you go over the iron bridge just out of Rye station, as we rely on you to get my husband up for work?

"When you don't hoot, we are in a fix as we cannot buy an alarm clock anywhere.

"P.S.: My husband says 'not too loud' but I say 'blow like blazes'."

Railroad officials said the request was being "considered."
