

ON THE MAIN STREET

Main Street is comparatively quiet these days but things are popping under the Peace Tower at Ottawa. Press agents are looking for a federal election, especially with Diefenbaker and Pearson grabbing at each other's throats. There is something in the wind and an off-shore breeze has reached the riding of Victoria and Haliburton. It is expected that both Tories and Liberals will shortly be calling a meeting of local executives. The NDP candidate, school teacher Allan McPhail at Cannington has already said he will be in the field again.

In the Liberal camp the name of David Logan keeps bonning up, but Clifford Benson is still a good bet according to some. In the Conservative ranks there is much speculation, especially with Charles Lamb, incumbent member under hospitalization. James McQuarrie, barrister may fling his hat in the ring, according to some people. There is talk that Glen Hodgson, member in the provincial parliament has dreams of entering the federal field where his father Clayton Hodgson served for many years.

Out of this idea comes the names mentioned for the provincial legislature, former mayor A. E. Hick, Roy Windover of Minden and a new prospective nominee in the person of Mayor Joseph Holton. Voters will be watching how the straws blow in the next political storm.
