by A SIXBIT CRITIC

When it was announced the other day that Pentti Lund, of the late and unlamented 1949 New York Rangers Hockey team, had won the Calder Trophy as the year's outstanding rookie; and that furthermore his young team-mate Allan Stanley had taken second place in the balloting, words of wisdom fell from the lips of one Conn Smythe.

"Thank Heaven" or words to that effect quoth the Maple Leaf's manager, "they don't decide the Stanley Cup by vote."

Now far be it from us to question the knowledge and judgment of the individuals who select these All Star teams and the winners of the various annaual awards. As for Pentti Lund being a pretty fair winger, and Allen Stanley a highly useful rearguard, we would be the last to deny that such is the case.

Still, there does seem to be something slightly haywire in the fact that the Maple Leafs, who have been practically outclassing everything else in the loop—that is to say when the real shooting started — should be so consitently overlooked when the honours are being handed out, also the extra cash that goes with them.

* * *

We were just about to give up as one of those deep, dark mysteries too tough for us to solve when an old adage came to mind. It runs something like this—In the Country of the Blind the one-eyed man is King."

So maybe that's the solution. Compared to their teammates— a very sorry lot, taken as a whole—Messrs. Lund and Stanley looked so good that they deceived the selectors.

* * *

Sport has on this continent produced a rather slim amount of poetry that is at all out of the ordinary. There was the ditty, years ago, about "Tinker to Evers to Chance," and the one about the great jockey Earl Sande, the refrain of which ran, "Gimme a handy guy like Sande, booting those babies in," of course. But, outside those and naturally the immortal "Casey at the Bat"—mighty little hat would grade above run-of-the-mill.

* * *

But we rather liked some stanzas by Arthur Kramer, in the New York Times, and because we thought some of you ball fans might enjoy them, also because they'll help fill up space on a day more fit for fishing than pounding a typewriter, we reproduce them here with They're entitled "KIND WORDS FOR THE UMP." And here they are:

The umpire, in his sober blue,
Nobody pipes a paean to.
Nobody croons him loving lays.
Nobody flutes him notes of praise.
Nobody laughs with him at bars,
Or offers silver-foiled cigars,
Or make him gifts of bottled brews
(However liberal with their boo's)
And this, I think is truly sad.
He too, was once a normal lad,
With normal instincts, normal powers,
No different, I am sure, from ours.
If, by chance of life, there slid
A cankerworm across his lid
And, in the course of time there stole
A dreadful blight throughout his soul
To warp his judgment color his mind,
Curdle his love for humankind,
Debase his reason, dim his sight,
Convert his kindliness to spite,
Harden his heart to pleading youth,
Deflect him from the ways of truth—
Is his the fault, is his the blame?
Shall pity never ease his shame?
Shall we forget he, too can trace
A kindship to the human race?
Be fair! Not all his deeds repel!
Why should we choke a friendly yell
For those he does surpassing well?
Then loudly let us celebrate
The art with which he sweeps the plate,
And sing (or if that's too much, hum)
The graceful up-thrust of his thumb—
In short, let's sometimes cheer the dumb,
Thick-headed, squint-eyed, blundering bum!

—ARTHUR KRAMER

For Safety's Sake

A man who had made a huge fortune overnight was boasting to a friend of the estate he had had just bought, and of the three swimming baths he was having built there.

"But why three?" asked the friend.

"One will be filled with cold water, one with warm water, and one is empty."

"But . . . what's the empty one for?"

"Well, you know, lots of my guests can't swim."

True To Form

Robinson was the champion borrower of the district, and one of his chief victims was his neighbour, Jones. One day, Jones, goaded beyond endurance, knocked Robinson down.

When the latter had recovered, he called on Jones.

"Well, what do you want now?" demanded the angry one.

"Does your first-aid book say what to do for a black eye? If so, can you lend me for a few moments?" asked Robinson, mildly.

WHAT GOES ON IN THE WORLD

by Norman Blair

GREAT BRITAIN

A very slight change in the wording of any statement can make a very great difference in its meaning. Back in 1926 the relationship of members of the British Commonwealth of Nations to the King was defined in this way; "the Crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British Commonwealth ——— (who) are united by a common allegiance to the Crown."

On April 27th., after a conference lasting six days, representatives of eight members of the Commonwealth announced a new definition of each nation's bond with the King. "Acceptance of the King as the symbol of the free association of its independent member nations and, as such, the head of the Commonwealth."

While sarcastic Londoners were suggesting that the national anthem be changed to "God Save the Symbol", there was an important purpose behind the changed definition. As it reads now it permits the Dominion of India, which has announced its intention of becoming a republic owing no allegiance to the Crown, to remain in the Commonwealth.

The loss of India would be a serious economic blow to the United Kingdom, which badly needs that country's vast markets. India, on the other hand, apparently made her decision to stay under the new definition largely because of the trade advantages the system of Empire preferences will guarantee.

On the whole, the effect of the announcement has been a real strengthening of the British Commonwealth's prestige throughout the world; and there are those who believe that Burma and Ireland, which have recently become independent republics, may wish to join the Commonwealth on the newly-defined terms.

GERMANY

With the possibility that the Berlin blockade may have been lifted before these words reach readers of this column, a slight glance backward might not be out of place.

It was on June 23rd, 1948, that a Soviet news service in Berlin made an announcement which read "All freight and passenger services from the western zones of Germany to Berlin is hereby suspended because of technical troubles." With that, the blockade of Berlin was in full blast.

The following day the British, American and French Military Governments imposed the counter blockade which banned all shipment of goods to the Soviet sector of Berlin. Two days later British and American pilots flew fifty transport planes into the German Capital, carrying supplies.

In the eleven months that have passed the blockade and the spectacular airlift have been the biggest things in the daily lives of the two and a quarter million Berliners living in the Western sector—and the success of the air lift, which was far beyond even the most optimistic hopes, has been the major instrument in softening the once-adamant position of Russia regarding the matter.

It looks very much as though; for once, the Russian bluff was "called"—and without provoking the armed clash which so many thought inevitable.

RUSSIA

For some weeks there have been rumors that the Soviet Union has launched what appears to be a delberate, large-scale and officially inspired campaign against the Jewish peoples. Even those who are willing to believe the worst regarding Russia found it hard to believe these reports, but evidence that they are true is piling up, slowly but surely.

The methods being used are a little more subtle than anything previously attempted by the Kremlin boys. The tactics consisted of denouncing as "passportless vagabonds" and "homeless cosmopolitans" certain well known artists, writers and critics, nearly all of whom are Jews. Frequently the Jewish names of the victims were printed after their Russianized ones.

Copies of the well-known Moscow satirical magazine "Krokodil" which recently arrived in America bear further evidence that such a campaign is in progress. Anti-Semitic cartoons satirize critics of Soviet music, plays and movies by showing each of them with a deliberately emphasized hooked nose and other supposedly Jewish characteristics. Strangely enough the artist who drew the cartoons is himself a Jew.

One of the cartoons bears the caption, "Pitiful and unpleasant are the quiet skeptics, the abstract persons, the passportless vagabonds of the human race." Names mentioned include those of D. W. Griffith, Walter Lippmann, Somerset Maugham and Jean-Paul Sartre.

Just what the Russians are up to in such a campaign—well, your guess is as good as mine. But I'd be willing to lay reasonable odds that it isn't anything which promises to be beneficial to the Jews.
