On Friday night, June 5th, Mr. H. One evening last week when the elements were at peace with all the earth and a happy, subdued feeling prevaded this happy burg, three beings in snowy white suddenly appeared before the astonished gaze of the innocent inhabitants. They wandered through town and finally disappeared in the gathering gloom, going in a southerly direction. In the noisy silence that followed, a sound as of rushing wind was heard. Soon they appeared again, a scared look on their once happy faces, whether caused by an unexpected meeting with the "beast," or possibly a couple of crazy-looking, two-legged ones, who can tell? Enough we know: they wavered a little at the crossing, then slided swiftly away to the west. Some coming from that direction say they saw them at a distance holding an animated discussion, then sped silently on.

Vandeleur, June 15th, '96.

To the Editor of The Advance.

DEAR SIR.—I see in a report of a suit in the colums of your paper in which I am defendant, statement which are false and misleading. Did your paper not extend beyond those who know the parties it would be quite unnecessary to correct them. "All went well later than '87, when John got married," but up to '92 when John had to ask the High Court to correct a flaw in a mortgage made from Weber to him when Weber threatened he would put John on the road, and his evidance at court, had the Judge believed him, would have gone far in that direction. The "strategetical move" was no more on the part of John than the other three brothers, brother-in-law and sister, who were all anxious the matter should be stopped. The statement that "Neither supplies nor cash were forthcoming" is false. I visited her at my brother's, Geo. Graham's, and told him to buy her all she asked for and to tell Hammond to send me the bill and I would pay it. "She again sought advice" through Weber, and a few visits on the part of Mr. Frost. I was sued in '92 for $862 and part maintenance since, nearly $1000. In '92 I, with my two brothers and brother-in-law, waited on Mr. Frost and offered $125.00 for arrears of rent and $100 a year after, which was refused. Was there not a lack of good advice when they have to take $350 and pay all costs, especially with a woman now nearly eighty years of age? The person who cannot advise their own family right is a very poor one to consult to give advice to another.

J. I. GRAHAM.

A man named McGuiggan, near Allliston, was tried in Barrie last week, for having more wives than the law allows. He proved, however, that he knew nothing of the whereabouts of his first wife for seven years, and as she did not wish to live with him again he was allowed to go, and with wife No. 2 he went home rejoicing.—Creemore Star.
