How to Get Rid of Mites

In the warm weather there are frequent enquiries as to why hens stop laying. In some cases the hens have laid very well all season, but suddenly the egg yield begins to fall off and sometimes ceases entirely.

It is needless to expect a flock to lay equally well at all times. A flock that has laid heavily during the winter will generally slow up towards the middle of the summer and when they begin to moult, but when the egg yield drops rapidly until it practically ceases without any apparent reason, suspect vermin.

Of all the many varieties of vermin that infest fowl the Red Mite is the most troublesome. Unlike the ordinary hen louse they are not as a rule found on the fowl, neither are they killed by dusting, as the ordinary body louse is. These pests breed very rapidly, especially during the hot weather, usually in cracks containing filth or in dirty nesting material. They are not red in colour as is popularly supposed, but gray. It is only after they have come into contact with the fowl and have become filled with blood that they appear red. The young mites are white and have only six legs but after casting their skins, which they do several times, they have eight legs. The cast skins may be seen like a white powder around the perches, this often being the first indication of the presence of mites. They are able to live and reproduce for months without animal food, the first food of the young probably being filth or decayed wood. They thrive best in dark dirty houses, and have been found to exist in houses the following season after the fowl had been removed. They usually attack the birds at night but are sometimes found on laying hens and they frequently drive broody hens from the nest. They pierce the skin with their needle-like jaws and suck the blood, after which they retire to the seclusion of the cracks and crevices of the roosts, nests or other parts of the house. They will bite man or other mammals causing severe irritation, but will never remain on them for any length of time.

If the fowl are not doing well and on examination are thinner than they should be, a sharp lookout should be kept for mites. At night they may be seen either on the fowl or running along the perches. In the day time examine the cracks and crevices of the roosts and walls closely, or lift the roosts and examine the places where they come in contact with the supports. If mites are found to be present the first step in banishing them is to give the house a thorough cleaning. Remove all droppings and old nesting material, scrape and sweep out every particle of dirt and burn it. Then if you are so fortunately situated that you have water pressure at your command, turn on the hose with as much pressure as you can get, forcing the water into every crack. If, as is the case on most farms, you cannot use this method, it is advisable to scrub down the walls with a brush or old broom, but in any case they should be thoroughly sprayed or painted with a good strong disinfectant. This wash should be repeated in a few days, to destroy the mites which hatch after the first application. The disinfectant may be applied with a hand spray pump or if such is not available, a brush will do, but in either case the fluid should be used liberally and every crack flooded.

Fresh air and sunlight are wonderful disinfectants and combined with cleanliness are preventives against most of the ills of the poultry yard.

Ordinary coal oil will kill mites but as it evaporates quickly the effects are not so lasting. An excellent "paint" to apply to the roosts and nest boxes is composed of one part crude carbolic to three or four parts coal oil.

Even after the house has been cleaned the cracks in the roosts and nest boxes should be flooded at regular intervals throughout the summer either with the forementioned "paint" or with coal oil. This will go far to keep the pests in check but it must be regarded simply as a check and the thorough or annual house cleaning described above put into effect as soon as possible.

To facilitate the ease with which this house cleaning may be done all fixtures such as roosts or nest boxes should be made movable. If they are stationary at present advantage should be taken of the first rainy day to change them. It will be time well spent.

On the Field of Honor

The publishers of The Family Herald and Weekly Star, Montreal, are making a strong bid for that beautiful picture, full of pathos, entitled "On the Field of Honor." It is assumed the publishers of the Family Herald have in mind using it as a presentation plate. If that is so there is a great treat in store for readers of The Family Herald and Weekly Star this autumn. In past years the Family Herald of Montreal has been noted not only for the wonderful excellence of that journal but for many beautiful pictures it has presented to its readers. The Family Herald has a name for succeeding in anything it undertakes, and we feel sure if it is humanly possible to secure "On the Field of Honor" that the publishers will succeed in getting it. "On the Field of Honor" is attracting widespread attention in Europe.

To the Panama Pacific Exposition

Via the Canadian Rockies

At the present time a great many are planning their annual tour. Considerable numbers visit the popular California resorts, while many prefer the unsurpassed resorts, palatial hotels and magnificent scenery of the Canadian Rockies. This year why not combine the two by a visit to the Panama Pacific Exposition.

Numerous people in comfortable circumstances, well able to afford a trip, have the mistaken idea that a journey of this nature is most expensive. This is not so, thanks to the modern railway facilities, an extensive trip, both interesting and educational, can be made with speed and comfort at a comparatively small cost. Why not investigate?

Those contemplating a trip of any nature will receive full information from any C. P. R. Agent; or write M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent, Toronto.

Mr. H. O. Bell, manager of the Bell Furniture Co. of Southampton, has been making a number of trips to Ottawa and Toronto lately and they have not been altogether for his health. Last Tuesday he returned home with a nice fat order for shells and shell boxes, tucked in his inside pocket, and Southampton mechanics should have a busy time this fall and winter filling these orders. We hope our factories here will be able to handle a good big slice of these orders.—Southampton Beacon.

During an electric storm last week a Varney young lady, a Miss Short, school teacher there, had a marvelous escape from death. She was sitting on a sofa when a bolt of lightning struck the house and passed down through the sofa. Miss Short was badly injured about the limbs and breast. Her clothes caught fire and she received some serious burns, but the medical men say she will recover. Prompt assistance extinguished the flames. The sofa was completely shattered and a dog which was lying underneath was instantly killed by the current. Miss Short's escape is said to be nothing short of miraculous. The young lady comes from Arthur, Ont.

While driving along the road in his car in the vicinity of Mr. Victor Tanner's in Elderslie Tp., on Friday afternoon last, Mr. F. C. Ryan overtook a flock of sheep in the middle of the road. Slowing up the car, he managed to get nearly past them, when one of the flock ran directly in front of the car, the wheels passing over and almost instantly killing it. The sheep belonged to Mr. Tanner. The car came out of it with a badly bent and twisted bumper. This is the second accident of this kind lately, owing to farmers letting their animals pasture along the roadside, Mr. Jas. Craig having run into and killed a calf a short time ago.—Paisley Advocate.

Expects Peace In Fall.

A Canadian trooper at the front, writing to friends in London, expresses the opinion, which is shared by the majority of his pals, that the end of summer will see the end of the war, and that the trench war will soon be a thing of the past.

"There has been little doing during the past few weeks," he writes, "but I fancy that we shall shortly be on the move.

"I have seen quite a few American Red Cross cars lately, and it is interesting and instructive to see signs on them such as 'From Friends in Boston, U.S.A.' Blood is thicker than water, and no doubt you have heard that the Saxons refuse to fire on our fellows in the trenches. I am filled with amazement and admiration for the British Tommy. I thought that I knew him pretty well, but I did not. He is really wonderful and it is a privilege and honor to do one's bit by his side. What he suffers during the winter, is beyond description. Let us hope that the nation will not forget him after the war."
