The Sam Hughes Look

The following very interesting article appeared in a London daily just prior to the removal of the second contingent to France :

" Yaas—sure."

If you cross the South Downs in Kent at the present time, and ask the first soldier you meet if you are in the neighborhood of the Canadian camps, you will receive this reply, " Yaas—sure.," in the accent which seems to English ears to hail direst from " Chicawgo,"--but it is pure Canadian.

There are many thousand Canadians camped on the Kentish Downs. A hundred years ago the Kentish yeomen trained there to meet Napoleon's threatened invasion. Eight hundred years ago, along the same line of hills, but a little further west, the Saxons gathered to meet the Norman invaders, and two thousand years ago the Britons tramped across these hill tops to watch the ships of the in coming Romans. Today Canada's second army has pitched its huts on the Downs, and if you ask the Canadian soldier whether he likes the spot, he replies emphatically, " Yaas--sure." If he did not he would be hard to please.

Canada has stamped her hall mark on every one of these thousands of her sons the Sam Hughes look.. Whether from the east, or the west, of the far west, or north, and they come from every corner of Canada—the Sam Hughes look is over them all. You see it in the eyes, whose glance is as straight as that of a machine gun, and in the mouth, which is as firm as a steel plate, and in the poise of the head, which is as steady as the Rocky Mountains. There is an air of assurance and confidence in the walk, as if each man felt quite sure that the earth was made for Canadians ; and a super-American aspect of independence, which is all part of the Sam Hughes look.

There are not merely battalions, but brigades of these tall, broad shouldered, deep chested Canadians on the Kentish Downs. Their faces are tanned,and they are as fit as men can be.

No one in England has heard much about them—the Press Bureau properly caused us to ignore their arrival—but for three months they have been at home on the Kentish Downs, and in two or three of the little straggling towns along the sea their maple leaf is more familiar than the badge of the Kentish battalions. All tho girls have several Canadian admirers each—sure.

But for all the intense Canadianism of these sons of the maple leaf, there is no doubting the breed from which they have sprung. They look, indeed, more Anglo-Saxon, for they have the pioneer bearing which must have marked the Anglo Saxon invaders, but which centuries of settlement have tamed in the English. They are more like our forefathers than we are ourselves.

Take your stand on some edges of the Downs a few miles from the camps, and watch a brigade of the Canadians come over the hillside. They are marching as to war, battalion after battalion, each with its mule train of ammunition, its supply wagons, its ambulances, and a line of cooking stoves on wheels,bubbling as they go, with the smoke trailing from their chimneys. After them come the guns, and the long line winds down the steep lane to the sea level, and crawls away across the miles of marsh land towards the bivouac for the night. It i a ready-for-war brigade, made and hall marked in Canada. But as you stand near the little old church where the dead of the parish have been buried during a thousand years, and as you watch these roving fighters swing by, the breasts of many of them bare to the sun and the breeze, and their grey-blue eyes bright with the joy of living, you begin to forget that they are all from Ontario, and that they are men who call themselves by that new name, Canadians. You see in them the old Anglo-Saxon fighters who conquered Britain and made England.

They bivouac in the chilly marshes for the night, sleeping on their waterproof sheets, and at 5.30 in the morning are astir again, for they are to fight the battle of Hastings anew, as invaders, with another brigade as the defending enemy. The defenders--men from Quebec, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and New Brunswick (a battalion of French-Canadians among them)—have bivouacked on the hillside, and at daybreak line the trenches prepared for the defence.

The fight occupies most of the day,and ends when the invaders, bridging a canal, turn the defenders' flank and gain the country at their rear. Like all true soldiers, when the fighting does not immediatsly concern them, some of the defenders snore peacefully in the shade at noonday under the trees, awaiting the signal for action. Here and there one of them gazes over the countryside with eyes for the beauty of the view.

" Sure, I never thought England was like this," says a New Brunswicker. " I always imagined England was all built up ; I didn't think there'd be fields and sheep and trees. I guess I'd like to have a good look around England when this war is through."

The real excitement of the day is that of the scouts, who crawl round cornfields, lie in wet ditches, and escape capture by miracles. A scout comes in, galloping, pulls up beside the officer who sent him out, and reports. He wastes no time in saluting, bnt just shakes his head and says, " Nothin' doin'." There is no excess of cerémony, but the Canadian officers and men understand and respect each other's worth.

It is a fine sight to see these Canadian brigades march past on the Downs, for there are no regiments in the British army which march better—and that is saying a great deal. You can see that every man of them is proud that he is a Canadian, and means to make everybody proud of Canada.

Like their cousines the Americans, the Canadian soldiers have a well-formed souvenir habit. They love spoons, old Sheffield plate tankards, table gongs—any little thing that reminds them of their visit to England.

" I think the real reason why that king chained Bibles in the churches," a Kentish sexton said, " was that he knew the Canadians would be coming."

" Well," replied a Canadian soldier,"I guess I'd like the chain, too."

Many of them will take living souvenirs back to Canada, or they will come and settle in England, when the war is over. All the girls for miles around have engagement rings.

Thurston-Durrant

A pretty house wedding took place at high noon on Wednesday of last week at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Thurston, when their eldest daughter, Florence Estelle, was united in wedlock to Mr. Nelson Havelock Durrant of Mitchell, Ont., in the presence of about thirty relatives and close friends of the bride. The ceremony was performed by Rev. James Dudgeon, pastor of the Methodist church. The bridal party was unattended. Warm congratulations were tendered the happy pair and all sat down to a wedding dinner, after which the bridal party were driven to Durham by Misses Laura and Lilian Armstrong in their handsome Overland car,where train was taken for Brampton, Orillia, Sunderland and Toronto. The happy couple will reside on their farm on the outskirts of Mitchell, where the many warm friends the bride left here, and those who so handsomely remember her with a really beautiful collection of valuable wedding presents,will always be welcome.

A pleasant feature of the occasion was the presence of the bride's grandmother, who, though in her 86th year, travelled all the way from Chicago to be present at the weddings of her eldest grandson, which took place in Toronto, and her eldest granddaughter.

Other out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. T. P. Foster of Tara, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Wallace of Kimberley,Miss Oda Durrant of Mitchell, Mrs. Shaw of Lions Head, Miss Myrtle Thurston of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Thurston and Miss Dell Thurston of Toronto,

Walkerton

Constable Jos. H. Armstrong, who was mulcted nearly $90 last June by Kincardine magistrates on a trespass charge in connection with a dog case, appealed before Judge Greig of Walkerton at the Division Court in Tiverton last week and won out. As Wm. McKenzie, who claimed to own the dog, was assessed nearly $100 for assaulting two or three fellows over the animal, the canine is becoming noted for the pile of cash that has been changing hands over it.

" Johnny Get Your Gun " is the advice the local nimrods are handing these days to Mr. Jack Bell, operator at the C.P.R. station here, who on Friday last journeyed some twenty miles to Priceville on a hunting expedition and discovered on reaching the firing line with his dog, knapsac and shells, that he had left home without his gun. A farmer living near the Priceville depot, feeing the plight he was in, came to Jack's assistance and erased the visions of an empty game bag and a vanishing stew, by arming him with the necessary weapon.—Herald and Times.
