Lieut. Col. McFarland, the commanding officer of the Greys, and his staff are doing everything possible to make the day a success, as are tha officers of the Grey Recruiting League, under whose auspices the day is being held, and every effort will be put forth to make the day the biggest in the history of Grey county."

A Raemaekers Poster

Louis Raemaekers, the famous Dutch Cartoonist, has generously drawn for the National Committee for Relief in Belgium one of the most remarkable and certainly the most heartrending of all the "War Posters."

The misery of the millions now in Belgium whom the Germans refuse to feed has inspired this notable artist to his finest effort. A Belgian woman, with a ragged red cloak over her shoulders, is holding tightly to her breast an infant in a shawl. Around the child is clasped the mother's hand—a hand which spells starvation. In the woman's face there is the infinite sorrow of motherhood, driven to despair by German inhumanity, and the pitiful, helpless yearning to relieve the child's suffering.

But it is in the face of the child that Raemaekers has told the full story of the tragedy of Belgium. The staring terror in the eyes that look up at the mother makes one shudder and turn away to think what might have been in England. With remorseless realism, Raemaekers, in this infant of pain, has visualised to the world the infamy of Germany.

The poster, which is artistically reproduced, has this laconic heading: "In Belgium." Underneath, appears the one word "Help." Any reader of this newspaper can secure a copy of the poster free of cost by sending a postcard to the Hon. Secretary, National Committee for Relief in Belgium, Trafalgar Buildings, Trafalgar Square, London.

Harry Bellamy, editor and proprietor of the Dungannon News, has suspended publication of his paper in order to enlist. He has joined the ranks of the 161st Huron Battalion.

Isabel Paterson

ONE thinks of Calgary mostly as a city which grew by magic under the wand of the C. P. R., from a rancher's village to be the distributing centre of a prosperous irrigation and farming district, but Isabel Paterson, in her novel "Shadow Riders," shows it as a whirlpool of human souls, of love and passion and political intrigues. There are two heroines in the book, one of whom is a newspaper woman who edits the woman's page on a Calgary newspaper and has two jealous rivals for her affections, while the other, whose reputation has been lost in an escapade, but comes back to Alberta in Paris gowns and an icy smile, as the wife of the Lieut.-Governor, to eclipse the women who had shut her out of their society. Speaking of her novel the other day in New York, Miss Paterson said her book dealt with the social game, which formerly was women's chief sport outside of her home interests. "It still continues to be so," she says, "in many Canadian towns like Calgary and Edmonton. But it is ceasing to be so, and what has done it is—work. When woman broke through the crust of superficiality and found that being a lady socially and being a worker was equally possible she made a great discovery." Miss Paterson thinks that there is inexhaustible material in the life of the cities of the Canadian West for the novelist of to-day, and is coming back from the United States to her old home in Canada to get more local color for other books.
