Take no more nauseous purgatives. Burdock Blood Bitters act mildly, pleasantly, and thoroughly upon the Bowels, and occasion no inconvenience while it regulates the Liver and Kidneys and tones the enfeeble system. Trial bottles 10 cents.

What is Lardine? Ask any farmer thrasher or mill man in fact any man who runs machinery and he will tell you that it is the only oil which will wear equal to Castor Oil and won't gum or clog your Machinery

At the approach of spring great attention should be given to purify the system engorged with foul humors during the winter. Burdock Blood Bitters is Nature's own purifying and regulating tonic. Sample bottles 10 cents.

Rheumatism is greatly dependent on a vitiated condition of the fluids, and may be eliminated from the system by cleansing the Blood and regulating the Kidneys. Burdock Blood Bitters will do this most effectually. Trial bottles 10 cents.

Dropsy is essentially a watery condition of the Blood, dependant upon disordered kidneys. Burdock Blood Bitters are strongly Diuretic, and consequently the best known remedy, acting as it does upon the entire Secretory System. Trial bottles 10 cents.

Consumption, that dread destroyer of the human race, is often the result of bad blood and low vitality, a scrofulous condition of the system. Burdock Blood Bitters cure Scrofula in its worst form. Trial bottles 10 cents.

Nervous debility is a result of indiscretion in the mode of living. Heed nature's unerring laws and take Burdock Blood bitters, the Great System Renovator and Blood, Liver and Kidney regulator and tonic. Sample bottles 10 cents.

Medicine taken into the stomach in concentrated form such as pills and powders, are most injurious. The great substitute for these nauseous little Calomel pills is Dr. Carson's stomach and constipation bitters. They cleanse the bowels, stimulate the liver and kidneys, and cure all stomach disorders, such as dyspepsia, and indigestion. In large bottles at 50cts. A. Turner & Co., Agents, Markdale.

GOLD—is excellent for filling decayed Teeth, but "TEABERRY" prevents the decay, makes them white and makes people lovable. 5 cent sample.

CHAPTER IX

REDMOND O'DONNELL.

Lord Ruysland and Lady Cecil were enroute from EnnisKillen to Torryglen on horseback. This is one of the wildest districts in Ireland, and they knew not the road. A country man misled them as to the route to be taken, directing them to cross a dangerous stream. The earl would not heed the warning of the simple Irish man, but dashed into the torrent, calling Lady Cecil to follow.

He seized her bridle rein, and the animals plunged headlong into the flood. Lady Cecil sat on her horse as though part of the animal, and grasped the reins with the strength of desperation. Both she and the earl strove to head their horses against the boiling current, but, after the first plunge, the terrified horses stood amid the seething foam as if spellbound. Lord Ruysland, his teeth set, struck his own a savage blow with his whip. He sprang madly forward, leading the other in his wake.

'Courage, Cecil—courage!' the earl shouted. 'We will for'l this hell of waters yet!'

But even as he spoke, at that instant she was unseated, and with a long, wild cry was tossed like a feather in the gale down straight to the awful precipice below.

No mortal help, it seemed, could save her. Her father made frantic efforts to reach her, but in vain. Near, nearer, nearer to that frightful, hissing chasm, to be dashed to atoms on the rocks below. In the midst of the waters the earl sat on his horse, white, powerless, paralyzed.

'Oh, God!' he cried, 'can nothing save her?'

'Cling to the rock for the love of God?' shouted a voice through the din of the storm.

She caught at a rock near, and grasped it with the tenacity of despair for a moment; another, and she was torn away, held with iron strength in the grasp of a strong arm. There was a last, desperate struggle with the surging flood—a struggle in which she and her rescuer were whirled over the chasm. Then in the uproar and darkness there came a lull: then she was lying on the opposite bank, drenched from head to foot, but saved from an awful death.

'Hurrah!' shouted a wild voice. 'Long life to ye, Mister Redmond! Shure it's yerself is the thrue warrant for a strong arm and a sthout heart! Begorro! though ye war near it! Upon me sowl, there isn't another man in the barony but yerself cud av done it.'

He bounded away in the rainy twilight with the speed of a young stag.

'By the powers, but it's like ye and all yer breed, seed, and generation, to go to the divil to save any one in distress, and thin fly as if he was after ye for fear ye'd get thanked. Oh, but it's meself that knows it—father an' son—this many a day well.

'That gallant youth,' the earl cried, flinging himself off his horse. 'I never saw a braver deed, Cecil—Cecil, my darling, thank Heaven you are saved! Cecil, my dearest are you hurt?'

He lifted the golden head and kissed the wan, wet face. In all her sixteen years of life, Lord Ruysland had never fully realized how he loved his only child before.

'Not hurt only stunned a little by the fright and the whirl of the water. And you, papa?'

'I am perfectly safe—but, good Heaven! what an escape that has been. In five seconds you would have been over that horrible gulf.—Why, that lad has the heart of a very lion! the most gallant thing I ever saw done. He risked his life without one thought I verily believe. A brave lad—a brave lad. And he has, as far as I could see, the air of a gentleman, too.'

'A gintleman, is it? Faith he is that, an' divil thank him for it! Shure he's the O'Donnell—no less; an' everybody knows the O'Donnells wor kings and princes afore the time o' Moses. Gintleman, indeed! Oh, thin, it's himself that is, an' his father an his father's father afore him. Weren't they kings o' Ulsther, time o' mind, and didn't they own every rood an' mile av the country ye re travellin' in the days o' Henry the Eighth, till himself with his wives an' his black guarden, tuk it from thim an' bes'howed it on dirty divils like himself? My curse an' the curse o' the crows on him and thim, hot an' heavy this night!'

Indeed,' said the earl; and who are you, my good fellow? A retainer of that kingly and fallen house, I take it!'

'I'm Lanty, yer honour—Lanty Lafferty, av it's blazen to ye—called after me grandfather on the mother's side—God be good to him, decent man! I'm Masther Redmond's own man, an' it's proud an' happy I am to be that same.'

Lanty led them away to Torryglen. Torryglen lay nestling in a green hollow amid the rugged hills and waving wealth of gorse and heather. A trim little cottage set in the centre of a flower garden, and fitted up within and without with every comfort and elegance. The earl's valet and Lady Cecil's maid had gone on in advance, and glorious peat fires, dry garments, and a savory dinner awaited them. For Lanty Lafferty, he was regaled in the kitchen, and when, hours after, he sought out his young master, he was glowing and flowing over with praises of 'the lord' and his daughter.

'Oh, the darlin, o' the purrohl! Wid a face like roses and new milk, an' two eyes av her own that nd warm the very cockles av yer heart only to look at an' hair for all iver ye seen like a cup of coffee!'

'Coffee, Lanty?'

'Ay coffee—an' wirra! but it's little av the same we get in the house. Shure I had a beautiful cup over there beyant an hour ago. Like coffee—not too sthrong, indeed—an' with just a notion of crame. That's it's colour; an', musha, but that's as purty a colour as ye'd find in a day's walk. An' whin she looks up at ye—like this now—out of the tail av her eye, an' wid a shmile on her beautiful face—oh, tare an' ages! av it wudn't make an ould man young only to look at her!'

The young O'Donnell laughed. He was lying at full length on the oak floor—before the blazing peat fire—in one of the few habitable rooms that remained of what had once been the 'Castle of the O'Donnell.' Lanty informed his master that the Earl intended to visit them. O'Donnell was poor, but proud, and remembrance of his great family made him resolve not to see the earl or Cecil. He went out on a lawn and two miles away saw the light of the cottage where was the life he had saved.

Lady Cecil gazed from that cottage window and up into the star lit sky and could see the outlines of the ruined castle of the O'Donnells.

'Poor fellow!' Lady Cecil thought. 'So young and so utterly friendless!—too proud to labour, and too poor to live as a gentleman—wasting his life in these savage rifins! Papa must do something for him when we return to England. He saved my life at the risk of his own, and so heavy a debt of gratitude as that must be paid.
