TEST YOUR SEED CORN

Seed corn as well as other seed should be secured early this year. A test for germination should be conducted and we can insure ourselves against failure on that score. The germination test may be conducted as follows:

Secure a shallow pan and place some soft flannel or blotting paper on the bottom, then count out 100 kernels of grain and place on cloth or blotter. Cover with another cloth or blotter and moisten thoroughly and put in warm temperature. The seed will germinate and we may get at the per centage of germination by counting the number of sprouted kernels. If corn does not come up, there is a great loss and we cannot put in a crop to replace it altogether. One is in better position to judge seed corn when on the cob.

Anyone wishing germination tests made may avail themselves of the Agricultural Office at Burlington where official tests will be secured. A small sample left with or mailed to the District Representative will be tested free.

A USEFUL PATRIOTIC GIFT

Splendid Automobile Ambulance Presented by the McLaughlin Carriage Company

While in Toronto the other day the editor of the FREE PRESS had the pleasure of inspecting the fine new automobile ambulance presented by the McLaughlin Carriage Company to the Canadian Branch of the Red Cross Society for use in France. It was carefully designed and built according to the latest specifications. The motor is also of the latest of the famous McLaughlin-Buick four cylinder type.

The large roomy body was constructed to accommodate four wounded soldiers in a reclining position and the arrangement permits celerity in handling the stretchers. There are also commodious lockers for the storing of surgical supplies.

The whole car is painted the usual war shade and prominently displayed on the sides is the Red Cross emblem, with the wording "Canadian Red Cross Society." It has the appearance of substantial construction and formed an object of much interest to all who have seen it. It was shipped on Saturday.

Welland County Council, which went to Toronto to inspect this ambulance, ordered one exactly its counterpart to be presented by the County.

WITH THE "PRISON FLEET"

The crack Canadian Northern liner, "Royal Edward" is now in the service of the British Admiralty, with the main prison fleet at Southend, Eng.

The Commandant Col. de Cordes, delegates as much authority as possible to the prisoners, who are made up of all classes, business men, noblemen, and from the millionaire to the entirely destitute. The Royal Edward to a very large extent is run by the prisoners themselves represented by a committee composed of Baron Nettelbladt, Baron Horst and Richard Hackmann.

Much of the work on board ship such as cleaning, serving tables, making beds and washing clothes is done by the prisoners themselves. At their request they have been allowed to take over the cooking and the bakery and draw rations daily from the supply depot. The arrangement works admirably, as there is a number of first-class cooks, bakers, waiters and former hotelkeepers on board among the German prisoners.

The service is much better than might be expected under the circumstances. If the "Royal Edward" were carrying passengers she could not possibly be more safe and spare than she is.

CUTTING OUT FRILLS.

Khaki Suits and Convict Haircuts the Proper Thing in London.

That armies during war times set the fashions not only for women, but for their husbands, sons and lovers, scoff as they may at the very idea that the word "fashion" enters into their scheme of life, is being demonstrated abroad very forcibly. For instance, patent leather boots and gaiters, to which the London man of affairs for years has been proverbially devoted, have given way to heavy uncompromising, soldierly footgear, much to the anguish of the manufacturers of "high-class" boots. Khaki is the "thing" in business suits and, though barbers moan and gnash their teeth, men no longer look upon their locks as adjuncts to beauty, to be nicely trimmed, and effectively arranged. They simply have their hair cut as short as it is possible with drawing blood and let it go at that. The tendency of the British army to-day is toward servicableness rather than showiness in dress and in every English community of any size it is very evident that this idea is having its effect on the people.

We do not usually associate trousers exclusively with warriors, and yet we owe both their introduction and reintroduction to military fashions. Originally worn by the ancient Britons, they were for a long time looked upon in polite Roman circles as a badge of barbarism. Indeed, Cicero is said to have once taunted a man with having sprung from "trousered" ancestors.

In A. D. 60, however, we read of a Roman general creating a great scandal by going to war in trousers, and shortly after they became part of the recognized military costume. Thence the fashion spread to the civil community, and we find the fact recorded that Alexander Severus made an innovation by affecting white trousers, previous emperors having all worn crimson ones.

Exactly when trousers disappeared from the legs of the male community is not known, but there is no doubt that their revival was once more due to military fashions. Introduced into the army by the Duke of Wellington during the peninsular war, and at first known as "Wellington's trousers," their general adoption excited tremendous opposition. The clergy and the fashionable world combined to oppose the innovation. An original trust deed, executed in 1820, of a Nonconformist chapel contains a clause providing that "under no circumstances shall a preacher be allowed to occupy the pulpit who wears trousers."

The universities were equally firm in their opposition. In 1832 the authorities of Trinity and St. John's Colleges, Cambridge, decreed that "students appearing in hall or chapel in pantaloons or trousers should be considered absent," while Almack's, the most fashionable of the London clubs, refused to admit anyone so attired. On one occasion the duke himself was denied admission because he was wearing his favorite trousers, and the victor on a hundred fields found himself compelled to beat a retreat before the onslaughts of a fashionable clique.

But the reverse was only a temporary one. Trousers had come to stay, and the duke before long had the satisfaction of seeing this innovation forced on the legs of the fashionable world—surely his most striking triumph. It may be, however, that as knee breeches, acting under military orders, gave way to trousers, so trousers may in their turn give place to puttees or some other covering for male legs. "Our legs, as well as our lives," comments a facetious Londoner, "are in the hands of the army.

Balls.

As the late Mr. Plowden, the police magistrate, was famous for his Plowdenisms, so was Serjeant Arabin, who sat as a judge in the Old Bailey in the 'thirties, noted for his sayings, which were collected in a little volume and called "Arabius."

Many of them savored of Sir Boyle Roche, such as—"If ever there was a case of clearer evidence than this case, this case is that case." And on another occasion he delivered himself of this extraordinary dictum: "If the learned counsel for the defence can show precisely at what moment the offence was committed, and that the prisoner was not there when he did it, he could not have done it. We cannot divest ourselves of common-sense even in courts of justice."

Thirty Million Cartridges.

How much ammunition does a modern army use? We shall not know until after the war what the German and the allied forces have been expending; but we know what the Germans used in 1870-1. The total for rifles was 30,000,000 cartridges; for field artillery, 362,000 rounds. It is worth noting that battles are much less costly in ammunition than sieges. The siege of Strasburg alone cost, weight for weight, three times the amount of ammunition used in all the decisive battles and actions throughout the whole war. Of course, these figures are a mere bagatelle compared with those of the present struggle, with its millions of soldiers and its quick-firing guns and its battles lasting for several weeks.

The Sickle of the Sphinx.

The oldest piece of wrought iron in existence is believed to be a roughly fashioned sickle blade found by Belzoni in Karnak, near Thebes. It was imbedded in mortar under the base of the sphinx and on that account is known as "the sickle of the sphinx." It is now in the British Museum and is believed to be nearly 4,000 years old.

Ivory For Britain.

The tusks of an ordinary elephant weigh 120 pounds and are worth $300. It requires 12,000 elephants to supply 650 tons of ivory to the English market. Sheffield takes one-third.

When a man gets his head swelled a brickbat poultice has been known to be helpsome.

No pain, no palm; no thorns, no thrones, no gall, no glory; no cross, no crown.—William Penn.

THAT COLD YOU HAVE

may bring sickness, doctors bills and loss of work; you know that serious sickness usually starts with a cold, and a cold only exists where weakness exists. Remember that.

Overcome the weakness and nature cures the cold—that is the law of reason. Carefully avoid drugged pills, syrups or stimulants; they are only props and braces and whips.

It is the pure medicinal nourishment in Scott's Emulsion that quickly enriches the blood, strengthens the lungs and helps heal the air passages.

And mark this well—Scott's Emulsion generates body heat as protection against winter sickness. Get Scott's at your drug store to-day. It always strengthens and builds up.

Closing Up The Gaps

The telephone is fast closing up the gaps between farm houses, making farmers neighbors in as real a sense as are townsfolk.

And it is not alone in this increase of neighborliness that the telephone proves a boon to the farmer. In the every-day business of farming it is a priceless aid. In the single item of enabling the farmer to keep in touch the markets in selling his produce the telephone has often saved ten times its cost.

In emergencies, the use of the telephone has saved lives, checked fires, summoned timely help and effected such economies of time and labor at critical moments as to make it invaluable.

Have you a telephone? It can prove its worth to you as it has done to others.
