The United States Is in the War

President Wilson's note to Congress on Monday places the United States definitely in the war with the Allies.

The objects of the U. S. in entering the war, the president said, were to vindicate the principle of peace and justice against selfish and autocratic power. Without selfish ends, for conquest or dominion, seeking no indemnities, or material compensations for the sacrifices it shall make, the U. S. must enter the war, the president said, to make the world safe for democracy as only one of the champions of the rights of mankind, and would be satisfied when those rights were as secure as the faith and freedom of nations could make them.

The president's address was sent in full to Germany, by a German official news agency, for publication in that country. The text also went to England, and a summary of its contents was sent around the world to other nations.

The sea gulls have again made their appearence on the flats north of our village where their shrill cry can be heard all day long.

Our police trustees were busy repairing our sidewalks on Saturday and they were certainly in need of repair.

The meanest man at last has been discovered. He's the fellow that won't pay the poultry fancier a living price for a setting of pure bred eggs but will go to the store where the fancier sells his hen fruit and tells the storekeeper to save him a setting of so and so's eggs. For such a vagabond the Lord has no use and even his Satanic Majesty would turn his nose up in contempt at the scoundrel.
