"Let Me Help You Carry the Burden, Mother"

"If Canada fails us in October, we must curtail many of our activities."
Sir ARTHUR STANLEY, Chairman, Executive Committee, British Red Cross.

It now costs $300,000.00 a week to carry on the work of the British Red Cross, or $16,000,000.00 a year.

Every minute of the day and night it costs $30 to minister to the sick and wounded and dying.

Last year Ontario's magnificent contribution paid for the entire work of the British Red Cross for nearly six weeks.

This year, in view of the greater need, it is earnestly and confidently hoped that Ontario's contributions will be as great proportionately as the magnificent offering of last year

Our trust is, that the Citizens of Ontario will give generously to this noble cause on—

"OUR DAY", OCTOBER 18th

A Few Facts about British Red Cross Work.

The British Red Cross Society is the only institution which carries voluntary aid to the Sick and Wounded of the British forces on land and sea in every region of the War.

Its work is therefore the concern of all classes of British subjects, whether living in the British Isles, in the Dominions and Colonies beyond the seas, or in foreign countries.

Derwood Brown caught a sturgeon at Port Rowan the other day which had 21 pounds of caviar in it. He sold the caviar for $3 per pound and the fish for 30c a pound. The whole fish netted him $76.50, the price of a good working horse or a cow. It is rare to find caviar in a fish at this season of year.

Association of Cowes With British Yachting Goes Back Many Years

THE association of Cowes with yachting goes back many centuries; back, indeed, to the spacious days of Queen Elizabeth, for it was in 1588, the same year that her admirals defeated the Spanish Armada, that Queen Elizabeth had built for her, in the shipyards of Cowes, "a pleasure boat." Cowes, however, had little more to do with yachting until the establishment of the Royal Yacht Squadron in 1812, and it never really seriously took up the matter until the golden age of yachting, which began about the year 1870. During racing week the morning papers give the events for the day, and the evening papers report the winners. Every house in Cowes has its visitors, every available hotel is filled to overflowing. The waters of Cowes Roads are filled with all manner of yachts, large and small, while across the blue Solent is seen the green and gray of the Hampshire downs, rising against the blue sky beyond Portsmouth. The view from the famous parade is an animated one at all times, for the Solent is never dull. When there are no yachts, there are warships; when there are no warships, there are great liners making their way slowly between the island and the mainland, from Southampton down the Channel, and so away to the west.

Nowadays, of course, it is all very different. There are few yachts in the Solent, and the great ocean liners no longer turn their sterns to "the Island" and steam off up Southampton Waters, or, bow on, come down out of the north, where Gosport hails Ryde across the narrow channel, for Southampton is a closed port. Nothing, however, can take away from the Old World beauty of Cowes itself or its surroundings, for it is singularly beautiful for situation. It is a twin town, of course, East and West Cowes, one on either side of the Medina, a name which always falls so exotically on the ear. Each town is an urban district, and the port between them is the chief one on the island, and the headquarters of the Yacht Squadron. Behind it all the houses rise picturesquely on those gentle wooded slopes which are so characteristic of the Isle of Wight.

The towns owe their origin to two forts, or castles, built on each side of the mouth of the Medina by Henry VIII., about the year 1540, as part of his great system of coast defense. The eastern one has disappeared, but the western one remains, and is used as a clubhouse of the Yacht Squadron. Then, close to it, is the marine parade of West Cowes, and the famous public promenade, so well known to the visitor as "the Green." And it is "the Green" that is, perhaps, the center of interest during Cowes Week. It is here that that curious, indefinable thing called society marks the end of another season. At Cowes, in Cowes Week, society has definitely left London behind. Before the day of the motor car made it possible to get back and forth so easily, society was wont, perhaps, to shake off the dust of London when it went to Goodwood. Nowadays, it has put off doing so until it comes to Cowes. After Cowes, there is a scattering to country houses, and "events of the season" are at an end.

And so, by day and night, "the Green," in Cowes Week, is a scene of much animation; but it is at night, perhaps, that those who have ever attended the famous week will remember it best, for it is at night that the sea and the sky seem to merge into one, the sky spangled with stars and the sea with countless little lights, white, red, and green, with, every now and again, a veritable constellation marking the place where a yacht, or a warship, illuminated to the masthead, is riding at anchor.

A Modern Decoration.

The parish church of South Hackney is ultra-modern in its dceorations. It has, at its west end, the fragment of a zeppelin, with the inscription: "Portion of zeppelin brought down at Cuffley in September, 1916, after having passed over South Hackney. Offered by the War Office to the parish church. For the daring and the courage of our aviators, we praise Thy name, O Lord!" There can be no question of lack of appreciation there, and the example of South Hackney parish church might be followed with advantage by those ridiculous people—they are happily not numerous—who vent their annoyance, at being bombed, on the British aviator, than whom no more "lion-hearted" fighter exists, nor more successful, provided he is given a chance.

Bark for Tanners.

Considerable quantities of the bark of the South African wattle-tree have been imported into the United Kingdom from Natal in recent years, but most of it prior to the war was exported to Germany and Belgium. Since then wattle-bark has been utilized to a far greater extent by tanners in this country.

Straw Hats.

The straw-hat trade of Luton and Dunstable and other places in the neighborhood depends upon the fact that the straw used for plaiting is grown on adjacent chalk land. The plant has great affinity for the silica in the chalk and flints, and uses it for coating the outside of the stalk with its beautiful glass-pipe covering.

Power Plants in Bombay.

Ten power plants for agricultural purposes were erected in the Bombay Presidency during the year 1915-16.
