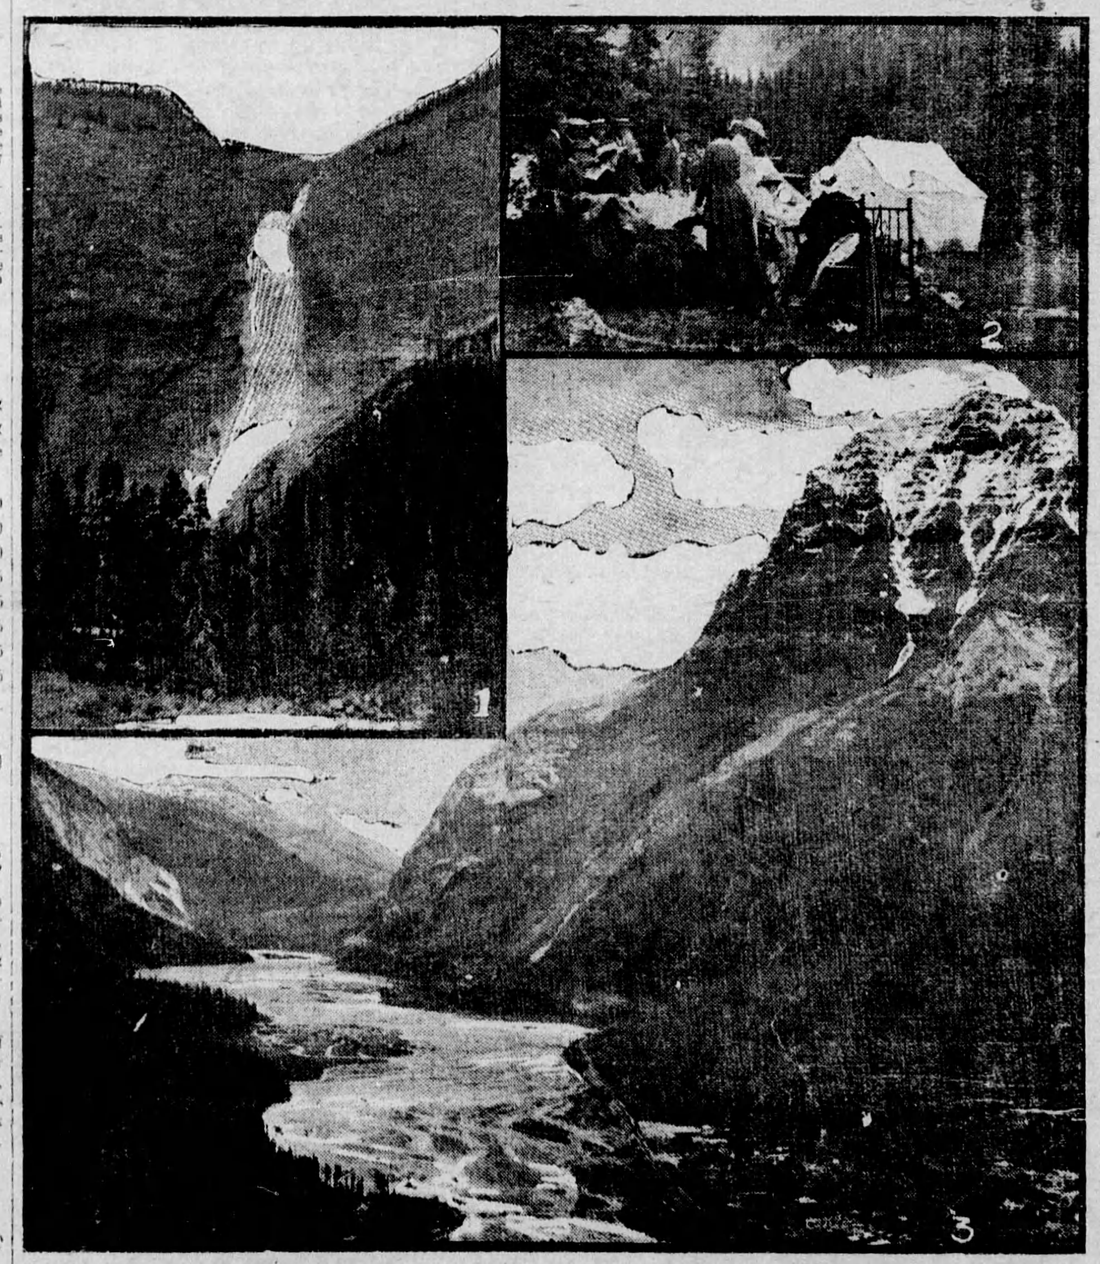
FALLING IN LOVE WITH YOHO



(1) The Famous Takakkaw Falls. (2) Camping under the Takakkaw Falls. (3) Mount Stephen

AMONGST the Canadian Rockies you meet folk from all over the world. And you really do meet them, not just read the tags on their luggage. People who wouldn't dream of following up their inclination to know you if they met you on Michigan Avenue or Broadway, calmly introduce themselves And you part friends.

I'd been staying at the Glacier, where I knew everybody from the waiters up, and when I had to leave and go east again I'd have cried on Sir Donald's shoulder, if he hadn't been ten thousand feet above sea level and covered with a week's snow at that.

"Oh, but you'll make friends at Field," they told me comfortingly. "Mount Stephen will take Sir Donald's place in your heart."

Field is a little bit of a town that looks as though it had been washed up by the Kicking Horse River and thrown at the feet of Mts Stephen and Dennis, where it hangs on by means of the long twin-steel rope of the track

On the train between Field and Lake Louise you pass the gigantic gate posts of the Yoho Valley, a few minutes out of Field But it took us more than four miles of scenic roadway to reach there passing en route the aerial silver mine whose great doorway, perched hundreds of feet above us looked like a swallow's nest for very littleness

Next morning we were up bright and early for the beautiful drive through the Yoho Valley.

After passing Cache Creek the road turned sharply to the left and we entered the valley that grows narrower and deeper and awesomer and steeper for close on six miles Here the crystal Kicking Horse falls into the glacial-muddy Yoho with a result that reminds you of marble cake until the two streams are thoroughly mixed.

Mt. Ogden towers 8,795 feet to our right as we swing round the corner of Mt. Field. Mt. Niles, a thousand feet taller still, lies north again, and beyond is Balfour another thousand step up into the blue.

The valley narrows. The plucky horses take one switchback after another as the trail goes up the mountain in a series of sharp Z's. The road, however, is a miracle of picturesque engineering.

At last the roaring river—it does roar between the granite bars of its long cage—is a hundred and fifty feet below and the bank on which the horses pause is so steep that it's almost undercut. You can hardly see the headlong Yoho, and if there weren't stout fences on which to lean undoubtedly mother wouldn't get out of the carriage to love Canada at closer range As it is we shiver at the lonesome-awesomeness of this dark gorge.

The valley widens again There are treed benches rising above it, beyond them steep bare precipices, and higher still the snow.

And then at last we came to Takakkaw.

The Indians looked at the swaying curtain of it and they said to one another, "Takakkaw!" which means "how wonderful." Over on the other side of the valley lies the camp which in a way deserves a "Takakkaw" of its own. There are bough beds and little stoves in every tent; there is the magic teepee in the centre of the clearing where the nightly fire coaxes grizzly stories out of the guides.

Not far from camp there is a big stream coming down the mountainside to the left, which, when it hits the valley branches into a perfect family tree of streamlets, a dozen big ones and dear knows how many grandchildren brooks that run here and there like fresh air excursion kiddies on a farm. Every winter the configuration of the place changes and the streams shout and begin all over again. No wonder the girl got lost.

We raced over the boulders. But boulders are treacherous animals to play with and will bite you in the back This one didn't approve of being raced over. The worm turned. I turned too—not quite a somersault—landing on my hands and knees in one of the grandchildren-brooklets.

There was a long hot ten minutes silence. I was glad the sun on the stones were strong and drying

"Takakkaw!" I cried, the fountains of my womanly sympathy carefully corked. "Did you go and fall in love with the Yoho too?"

To Face the Music.

According to James Fenimore Cooper, who said that he looked the matter up, the phrase "To face the music" originated among actors, who when they went on to play their parts had really to face the music. Another suggestion, which Cooper did not approve, was that it originated in the old time training days, when the militiamen were bound to appear armed and equipped facing the music.

Long Distance Lecturing.

A pretentious person said to the burgess of a country village:

"How would a lecture by me on Mount Vesuvius suit the inhabitants of your village?"

"Very well, sir; very well indeed," answered the burgess. "A lecture by you on Mount Vesuvius would suit them a great deal better than a lecture by you in this village, sir."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Save Some Money.

Every one should try to live within his income and also to put away a little of his salary for use on a stormy day. Don't watch the other fellow and learn how much he is spending; watch yourself and ascertain where you can benefit. It is time enough to increase your living expenses when your salary is advanced, when it is also time to add to your bank account.

The Untired Horse.

Mother—My dear, what is the matter with the horse? Isn't he walking lame? Small Boy—I know what's the matter, pop. One of his hind tires has come off.—Baltimore American.

Similarity.

"You say Grafter makes you think of a corkscrew. Why so?"

"Like a corkscrew, he has a pull, but it's on account of his crookedness."—Exchange.

CULTIVATE SIDE VISION.

It Will Enable You to See In Several Directions at Once.

One of the most useful gifts one can have is a good side vision. By side vision is meant literally ability to see in several directions at once and to know what is going on in other directions besides that upon which the gaze may be fixed at the moment.

Just try the next time you are reading your paper in the train, for instance, and you will understand clearly what is meant.

You can with little effort and while still reading follow the movements of those sitting opposite you and even those at your side.

With a little practice the range of your side vision can be extended behind you in each direction to an angle of forty-five degrees, and you can see clearly every movement that takes place on both sides simultaneously.

Now, just think what this means. The man in possession of a good side vision is not an easy one to take by surprise. In business he finds it a valuable asset, especially when talking with more than one person at a time.

He can guard against dangers from unexpected sources, and when crossing a roadway he can clearly see the traffic coming from either direction while still looking straight ahead.—London Answers.

Buttons Made From Yeast.

Buttons are now made from the spent yeast which collects in the vats of breweries. It is dyed, grained and pressed into any shape, and it has the great advantage over horn and bone that it grips as in a vise any metal part—a shank, for instance—that is pressed into it.

Which Is Yours?

The remuneration received for services rendered has many names. The laborer calls it "pay," the skilled mechanic "wages," the city clerk "salary," the banker "income," a lawyer "fees" and a burglar "swag."—London Answers.

King Honors C.P.R. Official

SIR Arthur H. Harris, who has been made a Knight Commander of the British Empire for his services in Canada as Director of Overseas Transport, is a son of the late Henry Vinton Harris of Devonport, Devonshire, England.

Educated at the Devonport and Stoke Grammar School he came to this country in the seventies, entering the services of the Grand Trunk Railway, and rising to the position of General Freight Agent Through Traffic.

In 1902 he joined the Canadian Pacific Railway, since which date to August, 1914, he was actively engaged in initiating traffic for the Company's rail and ocean services.

SIR ARTHUR H. HARRIS, Director of Overseas Transport.

On the outbreak of the war, the President of the Canadian Pacific offered Mr. Harris' services to the Imperial and Canadian Governments for the purpose of organizing and directing an Overseas Transport Department, the successful administration of which is now recognized by His Majesty.

He is a member of St. James' Club, Montreal; Rideau Club, Ottawa; and the Montreal Royal Golf Club.

In 1888 he married a daughter of the late William B. Lambe, B.C.L., of Montreal, granddaughter of the late Hon. Wm. Morris, at one time Receiver-General of Canada, and niece of the late Hon. Alexander Morris, First Governor of Manitoba and the North West Territories.
