MANY INDIAN RELICS

Island Near Manitoulin Evidently Scene of Many Conflicts

About five miles from the south shore of the Manitoulin Island lies Lake Mindemoya, or, in the Indian tongue, "Lake of the Old Woman." It is about seven miles long, and varies from one to three miles in width, and, with its pretty sandy beaches, sheltered bays, and its island, is one of the most beautiful lakes in Ontario. It is in the limestone area, and, consequently, part of the shore is formed by high, precipitous cliffs of the limestone rock, moss-grown, weathered, and cleft by frost and storm.

High up in the face of this rock, a large cave was discovered many years ago. A man was walking along the cliff, when he suddenly saw before him this huge chamber in the rock. Strewn upon the floor were Indian skeletons and weapons, just as they must have fallen when hemmed in by a hostile tribe. One skeleton was of gigantic size. As further proof that this was an Indian stronghold, the whole front of the cave was once walled up with flat stones to a considerable height; this defence has fallen down, but still the form of the wall can be seen in the mass of stones lying on the ground.

About nine miles northeast of the cave lie what are supposed to be the remains of another old Indian fort. A row of stakes, planted in a circular form, is all that remains, and most of these are decayed and just visible above the level of the earth. Tradition says that this was used as a defence during an Indian war. Several places near Lake Mindemoya are known as battle grounds because of the stone arrowheads and other weapons found.

CANADA'S PULPWOOD

Huge Quantities That Would be More Valuable if Manufactured

Fifty-six per cent. of the pulpwood cut in Canada during the year 1911 was exported to the United States. This is the fact shown by statistics collected by the forestry branch of the department of the interior.

The total quantity of pulpwood cut in Canada during 1911 was 1,520,227 cords. The quantity exported amounted to 847,939 cords, while the remaining forty-four per cent. (672,288 cords) was manufactured in Canada.

The value of this pulpwood was $3,340,592, an average of $6.29 per cord. Had the wood been retained in Canada and manufactured here, it is estimated that the value would have been increased to about $15,000,000.

Had Canada manufactured into wood-pulp all the pulp-wood she produced, she could have had enough to supply a hundred and twenty-two mills of the average size of those operating in Canada, instead of the fifty-four she now has. Quebec could have supplied sixty per cent. more mills than she is now doing, and New Brunswick could have doubled the number of her mills.
