WAS GREAT SIGHTSEER

Barrister Who Never Missed Public Functions in London

Few men can have witnessed a greater number of public functions than Mr. Henry Moses, a barrister, of Clifton House, Slough, who died at the age of seventy-eight. Coming to London from Dublin in 1872 he had devoted himself to getting into a front place and witnessing the particular public function of the day. He was a spectator during the Tichborne trial, and he used to boast that for forty years he had seldom missed an opening of Parliament. He was able to secure a seat at the police court to await the arrival of the Jameson raid leaders. The public and the press were kept in the dark, but Mr. Moses knew, and when the leaders entered the court he, almost alone among the public, was there to witness an historic scene. When Gladstone lay in state Mr. Moses was among the first of the public to enter Westminster Hall. Once during a royal progress at the bottom of St. James' street was a refuge for a police officer and several privileged persons. Mr. Moses was there among them. Only once he appears to have been unsuccessful. That was when Carl Lody, the spy, was being tried at the Middlesex Guildhall and the public were rigorously excluded. This latter announcement as a rule never worried Mr. Moses, rather it added a piquant flavor to his own success. But on this occasion Mr. Moses retired amazed at his failure and consoled only by the thought that a distinguished Law Lord had also just been turned away.

Poultry Development in Canada

The novice who has not carefully followed the direction of poultry development in Canada, can understand the fate which the poultry industry has now reached must constitute a distinct surprise. Whether viewed from the standpoint of the farmer or of the produce trade, it is now one of the best organized and most progressive of any of our live stock industries. Cooperation amongst farmers in marketing is improving the product and realizing for them a higher price than they have hitherto been able to obtain. The reorganization of methods by the trade is providing against loss in handling, is assuring to the consumer a better article and establishing our export business upon a firm basis.

It is estimated that Canada and Cuba, during the last twenty years, receive from the United States about three-fourths of all the eggs exported by that country during that period. This situation, however, has now changed. Against an importation in 1913 of 15,240,111 dozen, we imported in 1914 more than 3,783,952 dozen. On the other hand while in 1913 we exported only 147,149 dozen in 1914 we exported 2,986,522 dozen. The conditions are not increase in production, for we consumed at least 17,000,000 dozen. Practically all of these eggs passed to the United Kingdom.

Notwithstanding the complaint of Canada as to the figures indicate prices for May, April and May have remained fairly on extraordinarily high level. For the first quarter of the year 1914 the price to producers, selling especatively, far less at least by and value of the price received for the corresponding period in 1915. For the month of March it was at least [illegible] and value and for the month of April at least [illegible] in advance of last year's price for these respective months. The demand for eggs for local consumption, for storage purposes and for immediate export has rarely been so keen as at the present moment. This situation is clearly reflected in the prices just quoted. Heavy domestic consumption in the face of the high price for meats, partly explains this condition. Confidence in the export demand, on the part of the produce trade, confirms it from another direction. Notwithstanding increased production, the egg and poultry business in Canada is in a very strong position at the present time.

Under these circumstances, we believe that it will be a very wise practice to raise as many chickens as it is possible or practicable to handle. Early hatched chicks make good winter layers.

MAKING OWN BOOKRACK SAVES MANY DOLLARS

Hint to Would-be Competitors—Profitable Work at the Cheapest Outlay

You can get the wood for this book rack from some old piece of furniture in the attic, or buy it for a few cents at a lumber yard. Begin work by drafting out the ends of the pieces from which they are to be cut. Draw your lines carefully with a fine-pointed hard pencil. The holes near the top of the sides need not be fully drawn. Mark their centres only. Use a ⅜-inch bit in boring each of the four holes which form the completed hole.

The curve at the top and sides is sawed with a compass saw and sandpaper. A compass or coping saw is a small wire frame with saw blades that may be put in quickly. They are very cheap for the boy mechanic. One frame and six blades can be bought for a small sum.

To ensure both ends being similar, mark them out from a cardboard pattern. In boring the holes have your hardwood piece blocked firmly and let it rest upon a piece of pine. Continue to turn the bit until it has cut into the pine a half inch. This will keep the reverse side of the hole from being broken and jagged.

Study Plan Carefully

The sliding part of the rack is shown in Fig. 2. Get a piece of flooring that has a match on one side and a groove on the other. Plane down the groove side and make it like the other. This is to fit into a frame made of grooved pieces "F" and "G" in Fig. 7. The end "E" is straight and fits flush against the end of the frame. Figs. 3, 2 and 5 show all dimensions and details.

Use small nails or fine screws, always boring holes for the latter. Not a nail or screw must show on the finished article. Start them always from the inside or underside. Strike them below the surface of the wood with a steel punch, putty over them and apply your palm.

The wood filler for hardwood comes next. This is colored dark or light oak with the stain before it is applied. A second coat of stain follows the filler, and if it does not look even apply a third coat. After this you can polish with wax. This book rack, ornamental and useful for the parlor table, will cost you only a few cents, instead of several dollars which it would cost at a store.

Where "Bunk" Came From

A reader is informed that "bunk," which describes the stuff "peddled out" to the public by the political press, is probably a contraction of "buncombe." The origin of this slang phrase, unlike that of most slang phrases, is well known. During one of the debates in the United States congress on slavery, a lot of vapid speeches had been made and the House was weary, when an old member arose and, in reply to cries that he should sit down, said he must speak "for Buncombe," that being the name of the county in North Carolina which he represented. The expression was hailed with delight, and came at once to be applied to all mere talk for talk's sake.—Victoria Colonist.

Scored Half a Run

Pitcher "Rube" Marshall, when a recruit with the Tigers, revived the yarn concerning the ball that was busted by a bat—and the unique ruling made by an umpire. It happened in a game in Kentucky. The score was tied at 2 to 2 in the ninth. The home team was at bat. The clouter over the fence—the other fell inside the field. The umpire deliberated for a long time on what ruling to make. Then he decided that the home team had scored one-half of a run—and the game went to the home team—2½ to 2.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT

Mrs. Sheldon Spent $1900 for Treatment Without Benefit. Finally Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Englewood, Ill.—"While going through the Change of Life I suffered with headaches, nervousness, flashes of heat, and I suffered so much I did not know what I was doing at times. I spent $1900 on doctors and not one did me any good. One day a lady called at my house and said she had been as sick as I was at one time, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made her well, so I took it and now I am just as well as I ever was. I cannot understand why women don't see how much pain and suffering they would escape by taking your medicine. I cannot praise it enough for it saved my life and kept me from the Insane Hospital."—Mrs. E. SHELDON, 5657 S. Halsted St., Englewood, Ill.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Official's Bonds.

Editor of Canadian Champion

By an Order-in Council passed May 8th and made public May 29th the amount of security to be given by clerks and bailiffs of the Division Courts has been largely increased. The sum has hitherto been fixed by the judges, but in future will be according to a definite scale varying with gross amount of fees received, and will on the average be about a three-fold increase. That any increase, however large, which provides complete security we and all reasonable people will admit, but there is another side to the question. In this and all such offices the emoluments should be such as will attract desirable officers and we doubt if that point has been sufficiently considered. The average annual income of clerks in the county of Halton last year was $245, and of bailiffs $122, while in other counties in Ontario the inspector's report shows that the annual income in other counties was in several cases less than $10, and these figures include insurance premiums, rent of office and some costs out of pocket.

The present is, unhappily, not a time for liberal expenditure, but it would seem as if the authorities in their praiseworthy zeal for economy had evidently scarcely given sufficient attention to what is likely to promote efficiency. —X.Y.Z.

SIR ERNEST SHACKLETON

Poet, Editor and Explorer Has Worked Very Hard

Sir Ernest Shakleton, the famous explorer, concerning whom so much anxiety, concerning whom so much 1874. "Since I was fifteen years of age," he once confessed, "I have worked for my living—at a shilling a month to begin with. When I was little more than sixteen I was shovelling coals at that wage off the coast of South America."

When he was twelve, Sir Ernest who was born at Kilkee, County Clare, was sent to Dulwich College. "He never rose high in the school or applied himself to his books," said his form master, "but his merits were always recognized." Sir Ernest stayed at the college for three years. Then, to gratify his roving disposition, he went to sea, entered the merchant service, sailed round the world four times, and was shipwrecked twice. His real chance of distinction came in 1907, when he was chosen as third lieutenant for the Antarctic Expedition which sailed in that year under Captain Scott. When he came home three years later he was appointed secretary to the Scottish Geographical Society in Edinburgh, an appointment he resigned to contest Dundee in the Unionist interest. He was defeated by a huge majority, and then organized the famous expedition to the Antarctic, which brought him within ninety-seven miles of the South Pole. He left for his third expedition in September, 1914.

Journalism has occupied some of Sir Ernest's time, and for a while he edited a monthly magazine in London. He is passionately fond of poetry, constantly quoting Browning and Tennyson, and writes really striking verse. In 1904 Sir Ernest married Miss Mary Dorman. He has two sons and one daughter.

WINDING WATCHES

You cannot secure the best service from a good watch or clock unless you know how to wind them so as to cause the least wear and irregularity in their delicate machinery. If a watch is wound both morning and evening at about the same hour, and a little less than half what it could be wound, it will run more evenly, wear much longer, and keep more accurate time than if it is wound up tight once a day. It is more or less dangerous to wind a watch during a heavy electric storm. An eight-day clock should be wound twice a week at as regular periods as possible to secure the best results.

Sultan's Fine Courtesy

A rather amusing little story of the Sultan of Morocco is told in connection with an official visit paid to him by a European diplomat. During the audience the diplomat noticed, with some surprise, that not one of the two or three clocks in the audience chamber was going. Very delicately he mentioned to the Sultan that his clocks had all stopped, and hinted that he would like to present him with one that would be more reliable. The Sultan thanked him. "But my clocks are excellent timekeepers," he added, with a smile. "They were all going until just before you came, but I had them all stopped, as I did not desire, during your excellency's all too brief visit, to be reminded of the flight of time."

EASY WAYS TO TELL TIME

Possession of Watch or Clock Is by No Means Necessary, as This Article Shows.

A boy who does not own a watch need not go without any knowledge of the time of day. There is a boy who works in a wheat elevator in an Iowa town, and this is how he manages it. A big window almost fills one side of the little office. Into a corner of the window creeps the sunlight early in the morning, and it shines all day long and creeps out of the other corner in the evening. On the floor where the edge of the shadow from the window sash falls just at noon the boy has placed a long chalk mark, for one o'clock, and so on up to six. The forenoon is similarly divided on the floor. Each day by simply looking at the edge of the sun's light he can tell what time it is. Once in two weeks he changes these marks, because the shadows change as the sun gets higher in the spring or lower in the fall.

This clever device—any of you may use it—suggests the way that the natives of Liberia, in Africa, who have no clocks, tell the time. They take the kernels from the nuts of the candle tree and wash and string them on the rib of a palm leaf. The first or top kernel is then lighted. All of the kernels are of the same size and substance, and each will burn a certain number of minutes, and then set fire to the next one below. The natives tie pieces of cloth at regular intervals along the strings to mark the divisions of time. Among the natives of Singar, in the Malay archipelago, another peculiar device is used. Two bottles are placed neck and neck and sand is put in one of them, which pours itself into the other every half hour, when the bottles are reversed.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

HAVE PEOPLED THE ISLAND

How Company of Dutch Soldiers and Their Wives Obeyed the Scriptural Injunction.

In 1865 eight Dutch soldiers were sent by the Netherlands East India company to the little island of Kissa, 16 miles off the most easterly point of Timor, according to "The Dutch East," a book by J. Macmillan Brown. A fort was built and they were told to watch the Portuguese.

The company forgot all about this lonely outpost, and Sergeant Kaffyn and his men realized that they were in fact marooned. They had their wives with them, a guiding principle of the Dutch East India company. They set to work to build houses and cultivate the land.

The descendants of these eight couples still remain. They have been wonderfully progressive in the two and a half centuries. The 16 have risen to 300, and they are a sturdy race with no signs of any evil effects from interbreeding. They still keep their blood pure and still have big families and many have fair European faces and complexions and many children have light hair and blue eyes.

These people had to work and work hard, and the consequence is that after 250 years in this tropical island despite intermarriages they are still prolific, and still keep their North European characteristics.

How He Did It.

To look at, Pendip wasn't the sort of man you would have expected to possess any particular talent, except perhaps a gift for never missing his train to work. He looked the sort of little person who would always be at the office on the stroke of time.

He had a face rather like a damaged pear, and wore a tie that hooked on to his collar stud.

As a matter of fact, he played the cornet very well, did Pendip, and, as he lived in a small house with a small wife and big family, people wondered that he had ever been allowed to practice enough to become efficient.

One day someone asked him how it was his wife had never objected to being disturbed by his earsplitting hobby.

"Well, you see," said Pendip confidentially, "though my wife is, of course, frightfully fond of me, still I know there is something about my face that she doesn't like, and I rather fancy she welcomed the change of expression I had to adopt to play the cornet properly. That's merely my idea, of course, but it's the only explanation that occurs to me!"

Meaning of Yankee.

There are several conflicting theories regarding the origin of the word Yankee. The most probable is that it came from a corrupt pronunciation by the Indians of the word English, or its French from Angiais. The term Yankee was originally applied only to the natives of the New England states but foreigners have extended it to all the natives of the United States and during the American Civil war the southerners used it as a term of reproach for all the inhabitants of the North.

A Hun Trick.

"Married women, whose husbands are at the front only have to present themselves at the office to obtain repayment of the price of their seats," was the alluring invitation recently flashed on the screen of all moving picture theatres in Frankfort. There was a general movement toward the office, but instead of receiving their money, all were bundled off in patrol wagons to the police headquarters, where they were informed that, since they had money enough to squander on amusements, the city would cut off their usual allowance.

RECAST SCHOOL SYSTEM

Mr. Black Says Saskatchewan Needs Something More Rational

The time has come candidly to recognize that a Saskatchewan school system should be based directly upon the needs and conditions of Saskatchewan and not upon those of the provinces from which we have hitherto borrowed our legislation. It must be a school system whose characteristics arise from the fact that this is distinctly an agricultural province and that its citizen body is exceptionally heterogeneous. The fundamental aims of Saskatchewan schools must be their adaptation to training for citizenship in a British democracy and to producing universally an attitude of intelligent sympathy towards our basic industry.

To these special local demands the present system is ill-adapted in many respects and the faults cannot be remedied without official action on the part of the assembly and the department of education. The present regulations with regard to school holidays, for example, entirely ignore the convenience and indeed the necessities of a farming population. A secondary school system without rural or agricultural high schools is little short of an organized conspiracy to bleed rural communities of their best young blood. In many other respects the present system manifests its conspicuous lack of the two features indicated above as essentials of a rational school system for Saskatchewan.—Norman F. Black.

Five Brothers Starred at Baseball During Quarter Century—Greatest Players of All Time

In an obscure corner of a newspaper appeared the following: "The Pittsburg Federal League club releases James Delehanty." What of it? This: It was the closing sentence of the history of the world's greatest baseball family. James was the last of the Delehantys. The six sons of an obscure, hard-working Cleveland teamster who became great ball players. Each, by brilliant exploits on the diamond, assisted in carving the name of Delehanty in fame as enduring as the game itself. Ed, Tom, Joe, James, Frank and Will all played in the big leagues in direct refutation of the established opinion that a ball player's brother never makes good.

Ed. Delehanty was the eldest and the greatest of the family. He began to make a name for himself in the late 80's, and for eleven straight years established a big league reputation that has never been surpassed. For eleven straight years "Big Ed" batted well over .300; twice he passed the .400 mark, on one other occasion he fell but one point short, .399, and in the following year hit for .394. Three other years he averaged over .370, and his poorest year was his first, when he batted .312. Ed. accomplished many feats with the willow; the most famous of these was probably his achievement in hitting four home runs and a single in five times at bat in one game.

Ed. Delehanty is considerd by many as the greatest of old-time players and the best natural hitter that ever lived. Almost all of his career was with the Philadelphia Nationals, but he also played with Cleveland, and was a member of the Washington club when he met his death, in 1903, by falling from a railway bridge.

The career of Tom, the second of the Delehantys, extended over fifteen years. He played with Cleveland, Joe, the third brother, starred with the St. Louis Nationals for two years. James was the fourth. He starred since 1900 as a star of many teams. He was played with nine big league teams and in every position on the diamond. Frank, the fifth brother, played with the New York Americans, and with Cleveland. Will, the youngest, never had a chance to star with a big league club, although he was drafted. An injury to his arm put him out of the game for good.

Jim was released to the Colonial League, the Federal farm. He is thirty-five years old. He is the last of the Delehanty's, and there are no more to take his place. It is the first time in nearly twenty-five years that the game has been without a Delehanty.
