INDIANS NO LONGER OUTCASTS

Red Man Has Taken His Place With Other Respected Members of American Social Life.

In the annual report of Cato Sells, commissioner of Indian affairs, this is said:

"Evidences of material and humanitarian advancement are everywhere apparent. Industrially and socially, the Indians are making unparalleled strides toward self-support and civilization. I have discovered that with sympathetic co-operation and intelligent encouragement their response is almost universal."

Within the last few years 42,110 Indian families have forsaken the tepee to live in houses. The tribal Indian rapidly is becoming "individualized." His red past is only a few years behind him, but it is in the past. The government no longer believes that wars with the Indians are possible. The question of peace with them is an answered one, and all that remains is to make of the Indian a self-supporting, self-respecting member of American society.

It has been said that the red past of the Indian is only a few years behind him. How strikingly this is shown by the fact that today many officers of the United States army below the rank of brigadier general wear the ribbon which shows that they have seen active service in warfare against the Apache, the Sioux, the Cheyenne, or other tribes of mountain and plain. It probably will be hard today to find any irreconcilables among the Indians of the West, unless the search be extended into the tepees of the ancients who grow to old age in a condition of roamers and warriors, and in whom nature forbids a change to take place.

Some Mixed Metaphors.

With Ireland so much in the limelight, it is appropriate that there should be a recrudescence of the "bull." One of the last Irishmen that one would expect to have been guilty of mixed metaphor is "Tim" Healy, M.P. Healy, in denouncing the new Man-Power Bill in Parliament, the other day, described it as a "mere mask to stiletto home rule."

This almost beats the remark of a gunner wounded on the western front. When all the detachment was down an officer ran to the gun, seized the lanyard and was about to pull it when the wounded gunner shouted, "For the love of heaven, sorr, don't fire the gun; it's not loaded!"

Sir Edward Sullivan recently in an address to the Royal Nurses' Association pointed out that Mr. Gladstone on one occasion, when interrupted in a speech, said, "It is no use for the honorable member to shake his head in the teeth of his own words." Earl Curzon, speaking on a licensing bill, announced that "The interests of employers and employes were the same nine times out of ten." In earlier days Sir Patrick O'Brien passionately proclaimed, "My unhappy country is swarming with absentee landlords."

In Dublin at the height of the rebellion in Easter week, 1916, a small boy who escaped from Sackville street, described that thoroughfare as "alive with corpses." In commenting on the death of an Irish judge, Baron Dowse, said: "A great Irishman has passed away. God grant that many who love their country will follow him."

A prisoner who was awaiting death in Kilmainham jail was taken seriously ill on the evening before his execution. The prison doctor was called in. He sent a hurried note to Dublin Castle to this effect:

"In my opinion, the prisoner cannot be removed from the cell to the place of execution without imminent danger to his life."

Four Years of War.

Four years ago Austria-Hungary declared war on helpless but courageous Serbia, and four years ago Great Britain notified Germany that she would, by force of arms, assert her treaty obligations to Belgium. To-day, excluding Russia and Roumania, twenty nations are at war, and ten others have severed diplomatic relations with the foe without joining in the hostilities. On the side of the Entente Allies are arrayed: Great Britain, France, United States, Italy, Belgium, Serbia, Portugal, Japan, China, Greece, Liberia, Panama, Cuba, Siam, Montenegro, and Hayti. The four enemy nations are Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey. The following have broken with the Central powers: Brazil, Bolivia, Ecuador, Egypt, Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Peru, and Uruguay.

Co-operation In the Old Land

ONE of the most important points referred to by Mr. Thomas Killon, in the course of his presidential address at the congress of the British Co-operative Union, held in Liverpool, recently, was that of the position of the Union as a leading factor in public affairs. It is a curious fact about the co-operative movement in England that, whilst it is undoubtedly one of the great movements of the country, with a membership of over 3,500,000 and a capital of over £67,000,000, its influence is almost entirely provincial and even parochial rather than national. This was strongly emphasized, some months ago, when the Union felt compelled to call an emergency meeting, in London, to protest against the refusal of the Prime Minister to receive a deputation, "and also against his persistent refusal to recognize the existence or usefulness of the movement." True, the protest was largely based on a mistake, and the Prime Minister, in a subsequent interview with the heads of the movement, warmly acknowledged the services of the Union; but, in so far as there was any neglect, on the part of the authorities, it was largely due to the fact that the co-operators have not taken a wide enough view of their own calling as a factor in the national, as distinct from what may be called the municipal, life of the country.

Mr. Killon, in his address, referred quite frankly to this question. The reason, he held, why co-operators had been asked by the Government to serve the country in an advisory capacity only, instead of being asked "to take the lead," was partly owing to the want of cohesion in their own ranks, and he went on to ask if it would not be possible to institute a central authority, which would not only be able to speak for the whole movement in national affairs, but could also command obedience from the entire organization.

The fact is, of course, that whatever views may be held as to co-operation in trade and commerce as a solution of all economic questions, the war is affording the co-operator a wonderful opportunity to prove his usefulness. In many different ways, the stupendous superiority of co-operation over disassociated effort has been proved, during the last four years, but the co-operative movement in Great Britain seems to have stood somewhat aloof from it all, and to have failed to appreciate fully the connection between co-operative war effort and its own activities. The result of this has been that, instead of taking the lead in supplying the country's needs, as the co-operator did so largely in Russia, during the early months of the war, through the Zemstvos under Prince Lvoff, and as he is doing so largely in France today, he has been reduced to the position of having to protest against the fact that his institution is largely ignored by the authorities.

It is welcome, therefore, to find that the Co-operative Union is steadily awakening to the necessity of taking a broader view of matters, as shown by the raising of such questions as parliamentary representation and union with the Labor party; whilst such men as Mr. Killon warmly urge that the Union should take a "higher view of trade and commerce," so that co-operators may help to give "a new, concrete, and solid foundation to the new world they desire to build."

"To the Mat" With Germany.

The Imperial Conference in London, according to cable advices, voted the other day on the question of restricting the naturalization of enemy aliens after the war, and of going to the mat with Germany in a trade war after the present conflict.

The official resume of the deliberations, as cabled here by the British Ministry of Information, states in part:

"The conference passed a resolution, stating the opinion of the majority of the members that legislation should be passed throughout the Empire restricting for a period after the war, so far as the circumstances of each country permitted, the possible naturalization of citizens of present enemy countries, and also the acquisition by them of any form of political rights or land or mining privileges."

Delegates from overseas voted as follows:

For a trade war—Australia, New Zealand, India and Newfoundland.

Against a trade war — South Africa.

Did not vote—Canada.

A Reasonable Charge.

"Charge for the guns," he said,
For he was in command.
His voice was low, but handled so
That all could understand.

"Charge for the guns," he said,
"But let me make it clear
That a fair price will quite suffice
I am no profiteer."

Not the First Hero.

Press despatches have been wrong in referring to the hero son of the late Sir Clive Phillipps-Wooley as the first Canadian naval officer lost in the present war. That distinction is shared by Midshipmen Cann and Hatheway of Fredericton, N.B., and Silver and Palmer, of Halifax, all lost with the Good Hope off Coronel.
