The Salvation Army Million Dollar Fund

MAIL YOUR CONTRIBUTION TO ONE OF THE TREASURERS BELOW, OR TO COMMISSIONER RICHARDS, 20 ALBERT ST., TORONTO

We MUST provide for the need of the Soldier and his family!

It is absolutely necessary to ensure certain safeguards and comforts to our boys over there and over here, so that they may be re-established in Canada, strong in body and soul, contented that we at home have stood by them to the finish. What sacrifice can we make for the boys who were prepared to sacrifice everything for us?

What the Salvation Army Has Done

It has provided comforts for fighting men since the twelfth day of the War.
Hundreds of thousands of parcels of food and clothing for the boys.
Tens of thousands of beds in Hostels in daily use in France, England and Canada.
197 Huts for Soldiers.
1,200 uniformed workers.
45 ambulances.
Thousands of War widows cared for.
Looked after soldiers' families.
Labored for the Master.
Helped to preserve the home ties.
Given the MOTHER touch to lonely men.

What Remains to be Done

Keep the Hostels open and open more, so that every returning soldier can get a clean bed and wholesome meals at a price he can afford to pay.

Provide comforts and safeguards for our boys, advancing into Germany, as well as those coming home and needing a place to eat and sleep, in Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, London, Chatham, Winnipeg or Vancouver.

Guide and assist soldiers' families, especially the widows and orphans.

Soldiers Home THE SALVATION ARMY Coming Campaign
January 19th to 25th

The Salvation Army is equipped and organized to take care of the soldiers' URGENT AND PERSONAL needs—needs that are imperative. It has never made a general appeal for funds to carry on this work until now. Give and give liberally. If you are not certain that your contribution will be taken up by a canvasser, send it direct to the Hon. Treasurer, Sir Edmund Walker, Toronto—subscriptions will be acknowledged.

ATTACKING ENGLAND.

German Activities In the Air During the War.

"The German seldom displayed anything approaching genius in his methods of carrying on war in the air, but his display of sound common sense has been truly remarkable," observes C. G. Gray, editor of The Airplane," writing in the Illustrated London News. "One may fairly say that, lacking originality of any kind, the German has a genius for the obvious." And he continues:—

"When Zeppelins raided England early in the war there were no anti-aircraft defences of any kind, and the Germans knew it perfectly well. There were no guns, no night-flying airplanes and no ammunition suitable for use against airships. Therefore the German did the obvious thing, and raided London at will. The really surprising thing is that he was so long thinking about it before he started. And it is still more surprising to find how little damage he did.

"Then, when the London anti-aircraft defences began to develop and he began to lose a few airships, he gave London up as a bad job and took to wandering about the country seeking for any big town on which to drop bombs.

"Then, when the anti-aircraft defences became well developed all over the country, the German left England alone for a period. The airships which he then possessed could not rise above 10,000 to 12,000 feet, where they were easily reached by airplanes and comparatively easily reached by airplanes and comparatively easily seen by gunners on the ground. Therefore, the German did the obvious thing and used his Zeppelins for scouting at sea and for raiding undefended places in the eastern war area, such as Bucharest and places with impossible names in Russia.

"Meantime he turned his genius for the obvious on to the task of building new types of Zeppelin which would fly faster and rise higher.

"When the German had produced half a dozen or so of such machines he waited for a suitable night, so misty that it was impossible to use searchlights, and he sent them over to bomb London. Unfortunately for the German, the mist was particularly thick in the vicinity of London and he failed to find his objective. The general officer commanding London aircraft defence area, having a genius for the unobvious, instead of turning on vain searchlights and illuminating the fog for the benefit of the German, or letting his guns fire at the sound of engines, and thus disclose the position of London, acted like the gentleman in Mr. Kipling's story and 'lay powerful doggo,' so that the German failed to find London at all—all except one of him who drifted across by sheer luck and dropped three fairly innocuous bombs.

"Meantime all the airships cruised about and burned much petrol. As they returned they were chased up high by gunfire and airplanes near the coast, where the air was clearer. There the ships ran into a strong wind from the north, which drove them down to the centre of France. For various good reasons their directional wireless apparatus failed there, so most of them kept on steering east and drifting south till at daybreak they had used all their fuel and found themselves still over France. Whereupon the lost ships landed and all except one were destroyed by their crews. Two or three of the whole fleet only escaped with difficulty back to Germany.

"This was another lesson to the German, who is always anxious to learn. So he worked out a new plan of campaign. It seems that his idea was to cruise over the North Sea at night—a dark night for preference — and make little dashes at coast towns which he believed to be only lightly defended, or which had been left in peace so long that their defenders had gone to sleep. Having dropped a few bombs, and thus having lightened himself considerably, so that he could go up high, he proceeded to wander about the country at a considerable altitude, where he could be heard and not seen, hoping to terrorize munition centres.

"From the German's point of view the scheme was obviously sensible, and he kept it up till he lost a few of his nice new 'high level' airships through their meeting airplanes which could fly higher still. That completed the activities of Germany in the air during the war."

Brave Children.

"I thought I had told you everything," says Mrs. June R. Lucas in her book called "The Children of France." "I haven't. To-day at 11 was almost the most thrilling moment of all at Evian. Sir hundred and eighty Belgian children arrived on the morning train. Two-thirds of them had been taken from their parents because their fathers would not work for the Germans. Those poor children, thin, sickly looking, alone, calling 'Vive la France,' then 'Vive la Belgique,' for the first time in three years! How they ate! They just stuffed that good dinner. I shall never forget their hands, little bird-like claws, so thin, and when they sang they waved those pathetic little hands. Such a column of song as came from them: 'Le roi, la loi, la liberte!' No one could bear it; the French, the Americans, the Belgian officials who had come to receive them, all stood with tears on their faces."

Denotes Privilege Title.

"Von" before a name in German denotes a privilege title, either inherited or bestowed by a monarch upon his subject for meritorious services. While formerly this prefix was found in military or feudal families only, many commoners, captains of industry, scientists, financiers and artists were so honored by their monarchs. The title is either hereditary or ceases with the death of the distinguished person.
