Bets He's Insulted

The last issue of the Flesherton Advance contained an extract from this paper together wsth a comment by the Advance editor. The nature of the comment we were unable to discover as the paper sent this office was a cult and impossible to read. We're not sure whether the comment was "funny" or just a plain insult, but knowing The Advance's style as only one of its exchanges can, we'll bet a cookie it was the latter.—Chatsworth News.

[Dear Boy : Any reference that could be made to those lost pants of yours would be excrutiatingly "funny." You lose your bet. Pass the cookies, please. And never again use that old "gag" about an unreadable exchange.—Editor Advance.]

Inducted at Priceville

Rev. C. S. Jones, the new pastor of Columba Church, Priceville, was inducted on Thursday of last week and preached his first sermon to his new congregation on Sunday. Previous to leaving Annan, where he had been located for the past 2 yrs, Mr. Jones was made the recipient of a handsome cheque and the following address :

Rev. C. S. Jones, Mrs. Jones and Family,

Almost twenty seven months ago the congregation of Annan, with those of Leith, Daywood and Johnston, assembled here to welcome you to our midst as our spiritual leaders. That was a day that cannot soon be forgotten by this congregation, nor can it easily be effaced from your own memories. During the solemn ceremonies of that evening you were ordained as a Minister of the church of Jesus Christ, and inducted into this pastoral charge. Tonight we are gathered together under entirely different circumstances. Then it was to bid you welcome as an influence for the better ment of the community but now it is to say farewell and to wish you God speed. During these months the bond of union between us has been strengthened, as we have learned the worth of your sterling qualities of mind and soul. Your pulpit ministrations have been instructive, uplifting and stimulating as you have faithfully interpreted to us the Gospel message. Your visitations in and out of the homes of our congregation have been a benediction to us all. We recognize that the task undertaken by you has not been an easy one and often we have not rendered you all the support due to your effort, but you have guided this congregation through an extremely delicate and difficult crisis with rare skill and honorable statesmanship. Through your acceptance of a hearty and unanimous call to another charge, holding out to you the promise of increased usefulness for the Master, we are compelled, though with reluctance we assure you, to sever the tie that has bound us to you as our Minister and to Mrs. Jones, your wife. No words of ours can at this time express our grateful appreciation for what you have been and done for us since getting among us, but we would ask you, Mr. Jones, to accept, on behalf of yourself and your family, this cheque. We do not presume that this small gift to you in any way measures our indebtedness to you, or our appreciation of your splendid services but it is given out of a full heart as a tangible evidence of the deep emotions which we cannot express. We now say farewell and wish you God speed. May your lot be cast in a pleasant place, a place of usefulness and service. May the richest blessings of God be upon the splendid service we feel you are able to render. May you be long spared to each other and to the great work of the Kingdom, and it will be with pardonable pride that this congregation will look back to these brief months when you wrought among us as ministers of the Eternal Gospel of Peace and Good Will. Signed on behalf of the congregation—John Riddell, George Michael.

Mat Sutcliffe, clerk of Sullivan, has a cow that is both well bred and profit. Within eleven months she has given birth to four calves. The first pair, which are less than a year old, are worth at least $120, and the Monday twins at $30, a very low estimate, so there is $160 in live stock added to the wealth of the county besides the milk produced in the interim. That Durham is not for sale. Her owner expects more twins.

When a tree in front of Alexander Bunnie's house at Ballinafad was struck by lightning, a big hole was ploughed in the ground, and the flying earth broke 35 panes of glass in the house.

On the farm of Mr. Harry Cox, St. George's Lake, North Orillia, a calf was born which weighed 120 pounds. This is the largest new-born calf recorded, so far as known.

HIGHEST EGG RETURNS

Secure These by Hatching Your Chicks Early.

Not Every Farmer Should Plant an Apple Orchard—Only Those Who Understand the Business and Wish to Specialize — The Small Orchard Is Usually Not Profitable.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE early hatched pullets are usually the best winter layers. Pullets hatched during the first three weeks of April not only lay from two to three dozen more eggs during the year but lay many more eggs during the winter. The average pullet begins laying at an age of six and one-half to seven months; the later hatched ones are slower to mature than those hatched early. To be sure your chickens will be hatched early an incubator is almost a necessity. The later the hens begin to lay, generally the later they become broody.

An incubator is a machine and responds to treatment the same as any other machine. It is not difficult to handle but it can not supply its own oil for heat or keep itself clean, nor yet can it supply the little chicks inside the eggs with good pure air unless the room in which the incubator is placed has good air.

The room in which the machine is run should be clean and well ventilated. If you can sleep in the room comfortably it is good enough. Usually a cellar is the best place because the temperature is more even and the machine is therefore easier to regulate as to heat. The incubator should be clean; especially is this true of the interior of the machine. It is advisable to brush out the machine as clean as you can, then wash it out with water and soap and lastly disinfect it. Perhaps one of the easiest materials to use is the common tarry compounds that are used about the stables. Just spray or wash the machine thoroughly after each hatch. It does not take much time and saves a lot of trouble with the chicks. With some types of machines having cloth tops in the hatching chamber it is wise to remove the old cloth each season and replace it with a new piece.

Be sure and test the thermometer. Take it into a drug store and the druggist will test it for you alongside one of known accuracy. Many hatches are lost through bad thermometers.

Get only clean eggs and of good size or set the kind of eggs you want the pullets to lay. Be sure your hands are clean when you turn the eggs. Oily or dirty hands lower the hatch. Do not keep the oil can in the same room as the incubator.

When chicks hatch do not feed them before they are at least forty-eight hours old. Should they pant inside the machine open the door a little. Give them plenty of air.—Prof. W. R. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

Who Should Plant an Apple Orchard.

The apple growing industry of the future in Ontario will be developed by men who like the work, and who have the perseverance and intelligence to meet the problems encountered. The necessary practice and experience can be acquired as one goes along, and the difficulties of financing the business can be overcome by starting in a small way, or by putting one's time on other crops while the orchard is growing. The men who should not undertake apple growing are those who do not like the work, and those who from lack of experience and knowledge expect to find in it phenomenal profits. The apple industry offers perhaps as good opportunities for profit as are to be found in any other line of agriculture or horticulture, but is at the same time no more profitable, on an average, than any other well-managed business; neither should encouragement be offered to land speculators, many of whom in the past put out misleading information as to profits to be made. The success of the industry will depend on, 1st, the man; 2nd, his local and farm condition. A man who understands orchard work and has a liking for it can make a success of apple orcharding as a side-line in general farming, in stock farming, or in dairying, although it may be pointed out that many dairy farmers find it does not pay to neglect their herds in order to care for a orchard. Orchards below five acres in size are likely to receive very little attention on most farms, and farmers who wish to develop apple orchards as a profitable side-line should plant not less than ten acres if possible. Orchards ranging in size from ten to twenty-five acres can be conducted as profitable side-lines on many farms.

The commercial apple growing industry is developing along two lines. There are now to be found quite a number of orchards ranging in size from forty acres up to one hundred and twenty-five, or larger. These constitute highly specialized businesses and are sound economic propositions provided one is so situated as to have the extra labor required at picking time. The chief difficulty with an orchard of this class is that a great deal of help is required at certain periods of the year, while at other periods there is little or no work to be done. The problem, therefore, becomes one of adjusting apple orcharding to other lines of production, so as to equalize the distribution of labor throughout the year. It would appear that an excellent system of diversification could be worked out by using strawberries, raspberries, currants and gooseberries along with apples or other tree fruits, excepting cherries. Cherries conflict in picking season with the small fruits, but can be handled along with apples unless strawberries and raspberries are preferred. — Prof. J. W. Crow, O. A. College, Guelph.
