Bright also made a speech before his constituents at Birmingham, in which he explained that he had declined his first appointment as Secretary on India, because the duties of that office were too severe for the present state of his health, and because he thought the views of the Ministry in regard to Indian policy, were too strongly advanced. He argued that the parliamentary elections offered evidence in favour of the adoption of his policy. THE WHELAN CASE.

The Court yesterday refused the application for a new trial in the whelan case—Mr Justice Morrison, however, dissenting. The judgments given, however, show that the opinion of the Court is against the ruling of Chief Justice Richards in the matter of the challenge, and the application fails only because the denial of the right to challenge for cause, while a peremptory challenge was in the power of the prisoner's counsel, is held to have worked the prisoner no injury, and because the right of challenge for cause was held to have been waived.

The failure of this application by no means exhausts the resources of this prisoner and his lawyers. The next step is the application for leave to appeal to the Court of Error and Appeal against the judgment rendered yesterday, and that application will be argued before the Queen's Bench on Thursday next. To bring the case again before the Court it was only necessary to obtain the fiat of the Attorney-General, which, we understand, has been granted. The next question is whether the Court of Queen's Bench can refuse the appeal in spite of the Crown office. The general opinion of the bar seems to be that the Attorney-General's consent is sufficient, but the question will be decided on Thursday. The Court of Appeal sits on the 31st of the present month, and if the appeal is granted, there will be a repetition of the argument, and the Court will decide whether to sustain or reverse the decision of the Queen's Bench. If the decision should be reversed then the prisoner will get a new trial, and another chance before a jury. If, on the other hand, the Court of Appeal sustains the Court below in refusing a new trial, the case is ended so far as the Courts of this country are concerned.

But that, it would appear, may not be the end of it absolutely. There is said to be still a chance to appeal to the Privy Council in England, but it is perhaps not worth while to speculate, at this stage, on the chance of the prisoner's friends finding the large sum necessary to carry the case there.—Globe.

A very surprising invention for the multiplication in any number of bas-reliefs in actual marble is about to be brought into actual operation in England. The invention consists in preparing a metal cast in intaglio from the model; and bringing this with repeated and gradual crushing force in contact with the block or slab of marble till the required relief is impressed or crumbled away, the mechanical power employed for this purpose resembling in principle that of a Nasmyth hammer, which can be so controlled that it may be made to drive a blow of many tons weight, or lightly crack a nutshell without bruising the kernel.

The most thrilling scene, says a correspondent that came under my observation was in the Sierra Nevada on the Central Pacific. Here the road is built on the side of a precipice 2,400 feet above the base, and the slope is so steep that the Chinamen who did the work were let down in baskets, and in this position drilled holes and charged them in the side of the mountain. At one time there were 400 of these charges, connected by a fuse, exploded at one time. Masses of rock weighing many tons fell to the bottom with terrific fury. When the debris had ceased to fall, the echoes were still repeating among the distant hills.

A subscription has been opened in Brussels in favour of a poor crippled girl, who, to save her sister from a week's imprisonment, to which she had been condemned for some slight offence, went there intead of the offender. The fraud was detected after she had suffered the punishment, and when brought before the judge she was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, which, however, she will now escape. Her answer to the question what induced her to substitute herself for her sister was that, being a cripple she could not maintain her aged mother, which her sister had done for a long time, "and therefore, she added, "it was better for me to go to prison and let her be free.

To the astonishment of all, on the day when Baron Rothschild's affairs had to be looked into, he owned that his fortune was more than double what his children supposed, as his books indicated, and that his private finances amounted to over a milliard. And this is how he kept statisticians on the wrong scent. He had opened accounts for false debtors under false names, unto whom he would pay in millions and millions regularly. There was a book for a certain Petro, at Constantinople; another for a Prince X. at Moscow; another for a nabob Nam Syab, at Bombay, and twenty others, or more, while he would personate these supposed individuals, thus paying the sums they gained, to all appearance, to himself. He would follow up the fluctuations of finances in all these different parts of the world, just as if these parties did exist, and place all the specie out to accumulate, while his private documents confirmed that he was the nabob, or viceroy, or prince, alias Rothschild. He gained 300,000,000 in 1849.

Thou canst not then be false to any man.
Hamlet Act I Scene 3.

Puffs are the known device of quacks and cheats
Rapacious, striving by unscrupulous feats
Of turgid boasting, deftly to deceive
Victims unwary who their tales believe.
I scorn their arts, and vaunt no spurious ware—
Soundness in quality's my constant care.
In each transaction 'tis my anxious aim
Of MORRISON to keep the upright name.
No custom's sought where value's not return'd,
Such is my scheme. Adulteration's spurned!
