W. H. THURSTON, EDITOR

A Mean Insinuation

Editor Advance: We read about different signs indicating a mild winter, such as flowers blooming, girls wearing low boots and short skirts, and birds still busy at housekeeping, but when a man deliberately announces that he saw snakes—well, he wasn't worrying about winter.—Scribe.

ANOTHER DOUBTING THOMAS

The Owen Sound Sun-Times quotes our snake item and proceeds to say: "If it were not for Mr. Thurston's well known abstinence someone might be suspicious. Snakes in November are like snowballs in July—very uncommon except under some circumstances. An affidavit from Br'er Thurston would suffice."

Well, this was one of the "circumstances." The idea of Br'er Fleming asking anybody for an affidavit! Just think of it!

Foresaw Her Death

A rare instance of insight into the future was revealed in the death of Mrs. Clarence Smith, an estimable lady who passed away on Sunday last, and who foretold many weeks before the exact day her spirit would take its flight. The deceased, who had been ailing for some time, was operated on at Buffalo last August for a malignant inward trouble, and on returning home a few weeks later, Mrs. Smith, who from the start entertained but slight hopes of recovery, had a premonition that her death would occur exactly three months from the operation, and going to the calender pointed out Nov. 23rd as the appointed day of her death, and strange to relate the passing of this esteemed lady actually occurred on the date she had predicted.—Bruce Herald and Times.

ALMOST A WHOLE FAMILY PERISH.

Two sisters, sole survivors of a once happy family, greeted us pleasantly, as we visited in a sunny ward at the Muskoka Free Hospital.

The mother and several other members of the family had died of consumption, and the plague had marked these two girls also for its own; but fortunately they were found in time.

One of them said: "I feel the Hospital has done me a great deal of good; everything is lovely, and I like it awful well." The other: "I have gained twelve pounds, and think I will be able to go home for good in six months."

Such is the work of the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives. Thousands of grateful patients can testify to the help they have received therein. It costs a great deal of money to carry on the work. Will you help?

Contributions may be sent to Sir William Gage, 84 Spadina avenue, or George A. Reid, 223 College street, Toronto.

IN THE CAUCASUS.

Another Racial Problem That Victors Must Solve.

Until the withdrawal of the Russian troops from the two Caucasian fronts, that of Persia and that of Erzeroom, in the December of 1917, the Caucasian problem had nothing in it to distinguish it from the general problem of Greater Russia in relation to the war. Throughout the period when the temporary Russian government under Kerenski was endeavoring to secure a stiffening of Russian efforts against Germany, the Caucasian fronts remained strong and unbroken, and even at their weakest moment in the late autumn of 1917, when Bolshevikism was making its inroads among the troops, the military power which the armies on these fronts represented was sufficient to warn off any ambitious attempts of the Turks. It was when Bolshevikism had gained control in the centre of Russia itself, and the influence of Kerenski had vanished, that the Russian troops, gathering up all that they could bear away with them, strode back to Russia and left the Caucasus with its few included nations to take care of itself. Till that time the Caucasus had been Russia; but from the moment of that desertion the Caucasians became an entity by itself with problems of its own and a danger of its own.

In the Great War, however, no European peoples can be entirely isolated. The fact that the Caucasus had in itself a particular value for both the Allied powers and Germany brought its own problem into the general problem which belonged to both sides in the world struggle.

The individual problem of the Caucasus was racial. Within the mountainous area of the country live the three jarring races of Armenians and Georgians, both Christian, and the Tartar Mohammedans. Religious differences here immediately laid open a certainty of internal division, given the absence of any external force to regulate affairs; while the political jealousies between the two Christian peoples added a more petty, though very definite, likelihood of a lack of unity between Armenian and Georgian in face of the Tartar opposition to both.

The North Coast of Norway.

Jonas Lie, a well-known writer, spent his boyhood on the northern coast of Norway, and it is Nordland which he depicts in "The Visionary." So successful was this volume that he was sent at the public expense to Nordland in order to make a study of the manners and characters of the dwellers in the polar zone.

"In Nordland," he says in "The Visionary," "all natural phenomena are intense and appear in colossal contrasts. There is an endless, stony-gray desert as in primeval times, before man dwelt there; but in the midst of this are also endless natural riches. There is sun and glory of summer, the day of which is not twelve hours, but last continuously, day and night, for three months—a warm, bright, fragrance-laden summer, with a wealth of color and changing beauty. Distances of seventy to eighty miles across the mirror of the sea approach, as it were, within earshot. Myriads of birds are surging through the air, like white breakers about the cliffs."

In the harbors typical boats of the north are still to be seen, with high prow and stern, though now they are only used, as smaller rowing boats. Not many years ago, however, these were the only kind of fishing boats used, larger, of course, than the rowing boats of to-day, but just as open, and looking very picturesque with their square sail and the clean-built body, reminding one somewhat of the old Viking ships. They were, however, unpractical, the sail having to be lowered when the boat had to "go about," and the boat turned by means of oars. Now motor vessels have replaced them, which of course has meant greater comfort, and increased profit.

Value Your Time

Big factories don't pay men to do the work machines will do. They make money by using modern machinery and modern methods.

Farmers who make money use modern methods, too. You shouldn't use hand-power for work a gasoline engine will do.

Get a Toronto Farm Engine. All those jobs that weary you now will become merely incidents in the day's work. Milking, separating, churning, sawing, grinding, sharpening tools, mixing cement, shelling corn, filling your silo—you can do these things quickly and economically.

Toronto Farm Engines are honestly built. Sturdy and simple, they need little attention. Run on gasoline or kerosene.

You can save money, time and trouble by using a Toronto Grain Grinder. Gives you big mill service right on your own farm, at small cost.

Toronto Saws solve the fuel problem on the farm. Utilize the waste wood on your farm.

Write for our books on engines, saws and grinders.
