Notice to the Public

To The People of Flesherton and vicinity:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—Having deemed it wise after 16 years, residence in Flesherton to remove my base of business operations to Toronto, where facilities are much better for supplying a good article in the marble line at more reasonable prices. I desire to take this opportunity of thanking the readers of The Advance for the liberal and much appreciated patronage of past years. At the same time it is my desire to maintain business relations with the people of this section, believing that I can, with my enlarged facilities, do them better service than in the past, and would respectfully ask all those desiring monuments or anything in the marble line to communicate with me, when such communications will have my early and earnest consideration.. Address.

Lawrence v. Henry.

This was a Division Court case tried last spring before Judge Morrison in which Noble Lawrence sued one Henry for the loss of cattle which had been pasturing on his place, owing to defective fences. At the first hearing Lawrence was nonsuited but applied for a new trial which was granted and heard before Judge Morrison at the last Division Court held in Dundalk. The judgment is given below in full and will repay perusal by the farming community. The judge says:

I accept as a correct exposition of the law bearing upon this case the following extract from the judgement of the Chancellor in the case of Pearson v. Sheppard, 21 O. R at P. 170; "Persons (e. g., farmers,) who take horses or cattle into their field to graze during the summer, or into their barn and stock yards to feed during the winter, are legally known as "agisters," If a horse so taken for hire is lost by an accident which the agister could reasonably guard against, he is responsible, and slight evidence of want of proper care may be sufficient for this purpose. The test is not necessarily the carewhich the agister may excercise as to his own animals, for they may be accustomed to a place of ranger to which a strange horse would be unused, and he may choose to take risks as to his own property, which would be unwarrantable as to that of another for which he is to be paid." In this case, now under consideration, the fences surrounding the lot where the cattle were pastured were undoubtedly altogether insufficient to confine cattle safely. This the defendant very well knew when he made the agreemen with the plaintiff and took in the latter's cattle I have no doult that the steers in question escaped and were so lost to the plaintiff in consequence of such defective fences. Under these circumstances I hold there was such negligence on the defendant's part as to make him responsible.

Light Remarks !

These long fall evenings make the use of a Lamp a necessity unless you wish to sit in the dark or go to bed with the sun. If you use a poor lamp you're not much farther ahead as you read or do your fancy work in semi-darkness and it's a toil instead of a pleasure—hurts your eyes too! With a good lamp it's another story, and you see things in a different light—the home's brighter and cheerier altogether.

We've anticipated the season's demand for lamp goods and have an elegant new assortment to offer you—inexpensive too!

Don't you want Something Really handsome In a Parlor Lamp? PRICES FROM $1 TO $5

All new patterns—tall or low—plain globes, hand painted globes, etched globes, tinted globes. All artistic, all good value, all new, a wide choice.

Good Lamps require Good Oil. It pays to buy good oil—it gives the best results in Lamp or Lantern in every case. We have a carload of American Water White Oil en route from Sarnia which will give the best of satisfaction, but for gilt edged use we recommend Pratt's Astral, the finest oil imported—We've a shipment of this coming too.

Fall Millinery

Thursday and Friday of last week were opening days in M. Richardson & Co's millinery rooms, and attracted a good deal of attention from the fair sex, auguring well for a good season. The display here this fall is superior to any thing we have yet seen, Miss Rankin and her two assistants having been busy for weeks preparing a large number of rich articles in headwear, which must be seen to be appriciated. The prevailing colors are dark shades richly and tastefully blended, and are all extremely appropriate to the autumn season. The rooms have been largely improved this fall in handsome draperies and with the addition of a large mirror form a bower of beauty which it is a pleasure to visit. Among the choice things to be seen we might mention a toque that was much admired. This had a small brim of softly folded corundum blue velvet, the crown being formed of natural grebe. Knots of blue tafetta and a large gold buckle completed a very stylish and most becoming hat. Another nice thing was a black hat with brim of velvet and satin folds and large tam crown trimmed with fine large plumes drooping over the left side, and finished with rosetts of velvet, ribbon with jet calachon in the centre. Still another was a large gainsboro shape trimmed in black velvet with two large drooping plumes caught with satin rosettes; tam crown with edge of crown and rim trimmed with blue and black chenille. Soft greens, castor, grey and raspberry shades appear to be popular, while lace is freely used, also grebe, mink pheasants breasts and wings.

Mrs. Trimble, who has this autumn visited both the Detroit and Toronto openings, has a beautiful variety of the very latest things to be had and her display is exceedingly creditable. A short description of some of the more atractive specimens will be of interest to our lady readers. The first which we might mention is a large shape rolling off face with open back and castor (new) shades, with underfacing of tucked white chiffon down to band covered with sequin jet; large white ostrich plume lying on brim with brilliant buckle; new plume in castor shade falling over crown, and on right a new satin rosette in the fashionable castor color; at the back and falling over the opening are two ostrich tips; the top of crown is made of sequin jet. Altogether the effect is very rich and is much admired. Another new shape is similar to the St. Leon but is slightly different, rolling off face with slight curve and drooping at the opposite side; the underfacing is of pink satin in new overcast tucks shrouded in open black sequin. The crown is richly trimmed in an altogether new style in draped pink satin with black chiffon tucked on eight fancy wires run through chiffon and draped over the pink. There is full double pink rosette at left edged with narrow black velvet ribbon. The trimming at back is of black satin loops and knots with buckles. The edge of this rim is bordered with black sequin jet trimming. One handsome black ostrich plume at the right completes one of the prettiest constructions possible. There is also a new style Russian turban in deep brim, covered with folded grey silk velvet and white tafetta silk; folds also run up on high crown. At the left side is a bandeau of grey velvet with a touch of black and two brilliant buckles. The body of the trimming is two large Ferris wheel rosettes also in grey and white, one lying on the crown and the other at left, while between lie two white quills. This also gives a rich effect. A pretty toque is draped in fancy brocaded velvet crown in rich blue, standing high at left side, with large twist of velvet knotted and thrown out broad and full around the brim, while just across the front comes a twist of tucked chiffon and brilliant buckles, and a paroquet nestles here on the brim. To the right is a large tucked white chiffon-draped rosette, and another paroquet nestles at the back with beak touching hair. This makes an extremely pretty toque. Then comes a dead black hat in sailor effect, done up in blackbirds on back and rim with ribbon shirred and pudded in a heavy roll, falling around the right side of rim and twisting over the back and across a bandeau at the back. The last which we can mention is an exact opposite of the preceding, a toque effect in bright red velvet and black drooping on face. The crown is built of red velvet with black velvet folds, while two pairs of black mercury wings are attached at the left. Around the front in the trimming are steel knobs. Across the back is an elaborate bow of red velvet edged with black folds, and caught with a single knob. These hats are all very beautiful and suit all complexions, from the darkest brunette the pink-and-white and flaxen haired. The ladies should certainly see these beautiful goods.

A good deal of superstitious fear has been occasioned by a curious freak of nature which occured on the farm of Mr. William Scales, who lives about a mile south of this place. It appears that for the past nine years a substance very much resembling blood oozes from the bare ground in the path to a milk house, during and succeeding every heavy rain storm. The amount of substance has been gradually on the increase, until at present, probably a quart of this red slime oozes from the ground and flows for a couple of feet, as the path is slightly inclined. On first thought one would expect to find the same substance existing under ground; but no, the soil under this is of a dry, sandy or gravelly nature and free from the least sign of anything of the sort. Moreover, Mr. Scales has from time to time, dug away portions of the earth, but all to no purpose. It should also be stated that this substance, watever it may be, clots when it has stood for a short time, in much the same manner as blood would. It is needless to report the cause for this strange phenomenon, as given by many of our old citizens, nor is it needfull to say that any authentic light on the subject would be appreciated by all.—Strathaven Cor. Advertiser.
