MAGDALA.

AN ABYSSINIAN BALLAD.

PART I. AIR—Lord Lovell.

King Theodore sat in his glory and might,
In jolly good spirits was he,
He had just been enjoying the daintiest sight
That an African monarch could see—see—see—
That an African monarch could see.

He was counting the heads of a bevy of wives,
Which were carelessly lying around;
They were tied up in bunches of fours and of fives,
And were scattered all over the ground—ground—ground—
And were scattered all over the ground

Then slowly and timidly up to his side,
With a diffidence charming to see,
Crawled sweet Theodore, his very last bride,
And thus to her master said she—she—she—
To her lord and her master said she.

"We are growing quite lonely, great sovereign of all,
Our solitude's really a bore,
For our sisters around us so rapidly fall,
That now we count hardly a score—score—score—
That now we count hardly a score.

"Oh, fill up our numbers, by purchase or stealth,
Without any needless delay,
And then, for your happiness, power, and health,
Your petitioner ever will pray—pray—pray—
Your petitioner ever will pray."

King Theodore tossed off a skullful of gin,
And nodded assent with a smile,
For he thought of a widow, with "oceans of tin,"
Who was queen of a sweet little isle—isle—isle—
Who was queen of a sweet little isle.

"Tis a capital notion," he shouted with glee,
"I'll hurry and write her a letter;
It's true she can't boast of a long pedigree,
But 'twill answer for want of a better—etter—etter—
But 'twill answer for want of a better.

So the letter was filled with effusions of love,
Such as ardent young sons of the South
Are wont to employ, in a jessamine grove,
When the heart rises up to the mouth—mouth—mouth—
When the heart rises up to the mouth.

And the monarch sat quietly drinking his gin,
With a gentle occasional sigh,
And married four times (just to keep his hand in),
While waiting the precious reply—ply—ply
While waiting the precious reply.

PART II. AIR: Young Lochinvar.

Oh! brave General Napier's come from the North,
And has marshalled his troops and is leading them forth,
And with camels and elephants, donkeys and boys,
Is making a terrible clatter and noise:
As Mars, not as Cupid, he visits the shore,
And he bears no love-token for King Theodore.

With rockets and Armstrongs and mortars enough,
Torpedoes and muskets, and rifles and stuff,
With powder and caps, which were bought by the ton,
This true British lion, and son of a gun,
Is bound to give vent to a thundering roar,
When he gets within bearing of King Theodore

With a flush on his cheek and a resolute mien
As he sternly recalls the affront to his Queen,
Each hardy foot soldier strides on at a pace
Which is less like a march than a regular race;
He laughs at the foes he must grapple before
He can come to close quarters with King Theodore.

Beside, there are brothers who languish and faint,
There are sisters with children, whose innocent plaint
Has pierced to the ears of the pitying throng,
With its burden of suffering, sorrow, and wrong:
'Tis a weighty inducement to settle the score
Which stands at the debit of King Theodore.

At last all the mountains and deserts are past,
And Magdala's fortress is sighted at last,
And Napier cries, in a confident tone,
"That paltry possession shall soon be our own,
Or you safely may swear that I battled and fell
In a cause which humanity glories to tell."
Things look rather doubtful, and scaly and sore,
For the peace of our hero, poor King Theodore.

The captives are freed, and with eager delight
They hail the glad welcome of sunshine and light,
But the stubborn barbarian scorns to admit
That he's met with a foe who can rival his wit;
So he fights to the last, and when naught else remains
He fires a pistol right into his brains (?)
And a mass of brown clay that encumbers his floor
Is all that is left of the King Theodore.

MORAL.

If you want to get married, don't venture too high,
Nor fly in a rage at the lady's reply;
Don't meddle with foreigners, women or men,
And thrust them like calves in some horrid old pen;
That game is played out, and will answer no more—
'Tis a moral that's left us by King Theodore.

FOURTEEN DAYS WITHOUT FOOD.—Charles Ross, a sailor, 19 years old, was carried on Saturday from the ship Ansel to the Pennsylvania Hospital, in an almost dying condition, the effect of long confinement and deprivation of food and drink. He had stowed himself away before the vessel left Liverpool, and, according to his account, was fourteen days without nourishment of any kind. Meanwhile his feet became frostbitten, and both of them rotted off. He is now a skeleton, and, with the necessity of amputating both legs above the knees, his recovery is scarcely possible.—Philadelphia Age, May 4.

THE PLEASURES OF SHOPPING.—Dear Punch—I am one of the old school, and like the old ways. Judge, then, my old friend, of the shock to my equanimity the other day. I required sixpennyworth of coat buttons, and went into the first shop which looked like one for the sale of that article. On entering, I walked up to the counter and said to the man, "I want some buttons." "Oh, Sir!" said he, "please go to the other side, to the 'Button Department,' this is Baby Linen." I went to the other side, and "I want some buttons," said I. "What do you want them for?" "For my coat." "Oh, then, Sir, if you please, to the next shop, this is the 'Ladies' Button Department.'" I was accordingly ushered by a perfumed ladies' button department gentleman, through several gilded corridors, then up one pair of stairs, and down another, and finally found myself roaming at large in the gentlemen's department general. I went up to the first counter and repeated my request. "Oh, Sir, if you please," said the attendant, "the other side; this is the 'Gentlemen's Flannel Department.'" It is needless to describe the thing any further. Suffice it to say that, after applying at the Gentlemen's Hosiery Department, running a tilt at the Gentlemen's Pantaloon Department, and being nearly stranded on the Gentlemen's Fancy Shirt Department, I got what I wanted, sixpennyworth of buttons. Ever yours, dear Punch, JOHN STRONG.

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

DR. DE JONGH'S Oil is convincingly proved by an overwhelming weight of medical testimony, and by the practical test of successful experience for twenty years in all parts of the world, to be, beyond all question, the purest, the most efficacious, the most palatable, and, from its rapid curative effects, the most economical of all kinds.

Hence the universal celebrity of Dr. de Jongh's Oil, and the unparalleled demand for this unrivalled preparation.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR HENRY MARSH, BART., M.D.,
Physician in Ordinary to the Queen in Ireland.

"I have frequently prescribed Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil. I consider it to be a very pure oil, not likely to create disgust, and a therapeutic agent of great value."

DR. EDWARD SMITH, F.R.S.,
Medical Officer to the Poor Law Board of Great Britain.

"We think it a great advantage that there is one kind of Cod Liver Oil which is universally admitted to be genuine—the Light-Brown Oil supplied by Dr. de Jongh. It has long been our practice, when prescribing the oil, to recommend this kind, since, amidst so much variety and uncertainty, we have confidence in its genuineness."—(Extract from "Consumption: its Early and Remediable Stages.")

DR. LANKESTER, F.R.S.,
Coroner for Central Middlesex.

"I consider that the purity of this oil is secured in its preparation, by the personal attention of so good a chemist and intelligent a physician as Dr. de Jongh, who has also written the best medical treatise on the oil with which I am acquainted. Hence, I deem the Cod Liver Oil sold under his guarantee to be preferable to any other kind as regards genuineness and medical efficacy."

Holloway's Worm Lozenges.

Are certain and safe remedy for worms in children and adults. As it is a well known and melancholy fact that one great cause of death among children is from Worms of parents the necessity of closely watching their children. By so doing, and understanding the symptoms and true cause of the disease, thousands of children might be saved from early graves. ABYSSINIAN EXPEDITION,

Wolla Galla Country, Abyssinia, March 20, 1868.—At length we are on our way to Magdala, relieved of our baggage, superfluous camp followers, which we left behind us at Ankobar, miles south of Lake Ashangi. We are moving near at a rapid pace towards our objective point, the royal fortress of Magdala, where the Great Negus is awaiting us in fancied security behind his "Armstrongs," those wonderful mortars of which so much has been written. The fate of Magdala is spoken of almost as much as possible, but the generals Napier and Merewether are in search for are therein incarcerated, provided that the prisoners which will make its capture a necessity. In four days from the present the column will be making impression on Ankobar Ambas, scattering death and ruin in the fortress, while the rockets and flames of fire in the midst of the thatched roofs of the dwellings of the town. If everything transpires as has been told, why in five short days we will be on our return to the sea, happy in the satisfactory finale of the enterprise; or, if we might as well abide time and fate for a few short days, and then we shall see what we shall see.

Messengers lately arrived from his camp at Theodorus intends to dispute the passage at the Bashelo, a stream which crosses our route within ten miles of Magdala. Both sides of the passage to the river are flanked by lofty cliffs, which afford suitable sites for artillery. If he should dispute the passage with safety to himself, wisdom in attacking the Engineers in this narrow defile; but aware of his inability through his native auxiliaries, there is no chance of his maintaining his ground for the elongated shells from the rifled guns on the adjacent heights would render the hills untenable, and a retreat in the meantime made by the British cavalry will cause him to "skedaddle" to defend his darling Magdala. There are only surmises and rumours, but they leave no doubt by the same irresponsible parties who reported Lake Ashangi to be swarming with hippopotami, or that a snowy range interposed itself between Lot and Wandachi which was impassable. Happily these things were never seen.

Musinger, the English envoy to the court of Prince Gobazye of Lorta, also reports that a portion of Theodorus' force is encamped on the Bashelo, and that the Prince intends to dispute the passage with the enemy will take place there. The camp of the Dajaz Mashesha is situated thirty miles from Magdala, which is visible with a good telescope. A portion of Theodorus' cavalry are in the province of Talanta for the sake of procuring supplies for the garrison. The inhabitants of the province resist the tyranny as much as possible, but the power of the great master is such that a general resistance to his power is what the world never dream of. The city of Magdala, though numbering 40,000 men, stands aloof from the English, content to be watching from afar the progress of events and await with folded arms the solution of the complex politics of the empire. If Theodorus is vanquished there will be no hands stretched out to grasp the reins of government and share the spoil. If he is victorious then Prince Gobazye and his sub, Dajaz Mashesha, with the Wallacit and Kussai, will be forced to hide their diminished heads in Tigrean's den to avoid the terrible wrath of the "king of kings." There will be no feasts for the beasts of prey and birds left bleaching on the field of battle; there will be many a warrior, proud and glorying in his manhood, shorn of his glory, no matter who is victorious. In every village there will be heard moaning and wailing, for much blood will unnecessarily be spilled, and savage, merciless deeds are done, for such are Abyssinian wars, and all this for the imbecility of a few Englishmen who vaunted of the courage of their nation and carried their bombast so far as to dare defy a jealous and numerous prince, who, whatever his faults, cared nothing but the welfare of his country.

Magdala is exactly forty-eight miles distant. The wisdom of the personal order which reduced the baggage, fully apparent on the march from Lot's Gindach. It would have been impossible to march over four or five miles a day with a train of 5,000 mules encumbering us. A few hundred transport animals that took with us, reduced of half their original complement of baggage, crowded up the defiles in fine style. We found as we advanced further into the Galla country, that other mountains and deep canyons, through which torrents rushed with impetuous force.

Passing through the region of country extending from Lake Ashangi to Wandis is covered with timber, it is evident from the brown appearance of many of the rocks, which are of scoria and pumice, that the whole country was at one period subject to volcanic action. The summits of the mountains assume the most peculiar shapes, which are in every direction. Some are rounded, others resemble domes, while many appear like castles over, but most of the table vast tables lifted up by towering eminences by lofty perpendicular and even as the hand of man. Pumice, porphyry boulders, heaped up in confusion, lined our route for miles, choked the torrent beds, rendered ascent in the extreme. Rain was also prevented when under natural excavations penetrating the bowels of the earth by masses of debris which had fallen down from the heights above. A more strange, and varied feature of scenery than this mountain region cannot be imagined. The wildest and most grotesque formations hitherto viewed were tame in comparison to the panorama which slowly unrolled as we wound down precipices, sailed up and descended frightful abysses, feeling our way inch by inch, by tortuous ravines appeared to which we were compelled to resort, and afterwards found them to be the only means of the frightful
