Behind the Veil.

Mr Edge was late at breakfast. That was not an unusual occurrence; and he was disposed to be cross; that was likewise nothing new; so he retired behind the newspaper and devoured his eggs and toast without vouchsafing any reply to the remarks of the fresh-looking little lady opposite, to wit: Mrs. Edge. But she was gathering together her forces for the final onslaught, and when at length Mr Edge had got down to the last paragraph, and laid aside the newspaper, it came.

"Dear, didn't you say you were going to have a hundred dollars for my new furs to—

"What furs?" (rather sharply was this spoken). "Oh, pshaw! What is the use of being extravagant?" I have no money to lay out in useless follies. The old ones are good enough for any sensible woman to wear."

Mrs. Edge—good, meek little soul that she was—relapsed into obedient silence. She only sighed a soft, inward sigh, and presently began a new attack.

"Henry, will you go with me to my aunt's to-night?"

"Can't you go alone?"

"Alone! how would it look?" Mrs. E's temper—for she had one, though it did not often parade itself—was aroused. "You, are so neglectful of those little attentions you used to pay me once; you never walk with me, nor ever pick up my handkerchief, nor notice my dress as you once did."

"Well, a fellow can't be ever waiting on a woman, can he?" growled Mr Edge.

"You could be polite enough to Mrs. Waters last night, when you never even thought to ask whether I wanted anything, though you knew perfectly well that I had a headache. I don't believe you care for me as much as you used to"—and Mrs. Edge looked extremely pretty with the tears in her blue eyes and the quiver on her round, rosy lips.

"Pshaw" said her husband peevishly "Now don't be silly, Maria.

"And in the stage yesterday, you never asked me if I was warm enough, or put my shawl around me, while Mr Brown was so affectionate to his wife. It was mortifying enough, Henry; indeed it was."

"I didn't know women were such fools," said Mr Edge as he drew on his overcoat, to escape the tempest which was fast approaching. "Am I the sort of a man to make a ninny of myself doing the polite to any sort of a female creature? Did you ever know me to be concious whether a woman had on a shawl or a swallow-tailed coat?"

Maria eclipsed the blue eyes behind a little pocket-handkerchief and Henry the savage, banged the door loud enough to give Betty in the kitchen a nervous start.

"Raining again! I do believe we are going to have a second edition of the deluge," said Mr Edge to himself that evening, as he ensconed his six feet of iniquity into the south-west corner of the car at City Hall. "Go ahead conductor, can't you see we are full, and it is dark already.

"In one minute, sir," said the conductor, as he helped a little woman, with a basket, on board. "Now, sir, move up a little if you please.

Mr Edge was exceedingly comfortable and did not want to move; but the light of the lamp falling on the pearly forehead and shining golded hair of the comer, he altered his mind and moved up.

"What lovely eyes," quoth he mentally, as she bowed a single acknowledging smile. "Real violet, the very colour I most admire. Bless me! what business have married men like me to be thinking about eyes? There, she has drawn a confounded veil over her face, and the light is as dim as a tallow dip; but those are pretty eyes."

The fair possesser of those blue eyes shivered slightly, and drew her mantilla close around her shoulders.

"Are you cold, Miss? Pray honour me by wearing my shawl. I do not need it myself."

She did not refuse—she murmured some faint apology for troubling him, but it was not a refusal.

"No trouble—not a bit," said he arranging it on her tempting shoulders; and then as the young lady handed her fare to the conductor, he said to himself—"what a slender little hand. If there is anything I admire in a woman, it is a pretty hand. Wonder what kind of a mouth she has got? It must be a delightful one if it corresponds with her hair and eyes—plague take the veil.

But "plague," whoever that mystical power may be, did not take possession of the veil, so Mr, Edge's curiosity about the blue-eyed damsel remained unsatisfied.

"Have you room enough, Miss? I fear you are crowded. Pray sit a little closer to me."

"Thank you, sir," was the soft reply, coming from behind the veil—as Mr Edge reflected—like an angel from a dark cloud. And his heart gave a large thump as the pretty shoulders touched his own shaggy overcoat in a hesitating sort of way.

"Decidedly, this is getting quite romantic," thought he, and then with an audible whisper, "what would Maria say?"

The rest of that long dreary ride was delicious with the shoulder against his own. How gallantly he jumped up to pull the strap for her—by some streak it happened to be in the very street where he intended to stop. And, under the circumstances, we hardly blame him, when the cars stop so suddenly that she caught at his arm, for the squeeze he gave the plump, rosy hand—any man of sense would have done the same—it was such an inviting little lily.

"Allow me to carry your basket, Miss, as our paths lie in the same direction," said Mr Edge, courteously relieving her of her burden as she spoke; "and—and—may be you'll find less difficulty if you take my arm."

Well, wasn't it delightful! Mr Edge forgot the wet streets and pitchy darkness—he thought he was walking on roses. Only as he approached his door he began to feel a little nervous, and wished the little incognito would not hold on so tight. Suppose Maria would be at the window, on the lookout, as she often was, how would she interpret matters? He couldn't make her believe that he only wanted to be polite to the fair traveler. Besides his sweeping declarations in the morning—she would be sure to recall them. As he stopped at the right number and bade her adieu, he was astonished to see her likewise run up the steps to enter. Gracious Apollo! He burst into a cold perspiration at the idea of the young lady's error.

"I think you must have made a mistake Miss, this can't be your house."

But he was too late—she was already in the brilliantly lighted hall, and turning round threw off her dripping habiliments and made a low courtesy.

"Why, it's my wife!" gasped Mr Edge.

"And happy to see that you have not forgotten all your gallantry towards us ladies," pursued the merciless little puss, her blue eyes (they were pretty) all in a dance with suppressed roguery,

Edge looked from ceiling to floor in vain search for a loop-hole to retreat, but the search was unavailing.

"Well," he said in the most sheepish of tones, It's the first time I was ever polite to a lady in the cars, and hang me if it shan't be the very last.

"You see, my dear," said the elastic little lady, "I didn't expect to be delayed so long, and had not any idea I should meet with such attention in the cars, and that from my husband too? Goodness gracious how Aunt Priscilla will enjoy the joke."

"If you tell that old harpy, I will never hear the last of it," said Edge, in desperation.

"Very probable," was the provoking reply of his wife."

"Now, look here, darling," said Mr Edge, coaxingly, "you won't say anything will you? A fellow don't want to be laughed at by all the world. I say, Maria, you shall have the prettiest furs in New York if you will only keep quiet—you shall upon my honour.

The terms were satisfactory, and Maria capitulated—who wouldn't? And that is the way she got those splendid furs that filled the hearts of all her female friends with envy. And perhaps it was what made Mr Edge such a courteous husband ever since.

THE BALLOT BOX OUTRAGED.

At Long Island City election for Mayor on Wednesday the excitement ran high, but no fraudulent or unfair practices were anticipated. Early in the morning a squad of about seventy of the worst characters in New York crossed the Thirty-fourth street ferry. They were sworn in as special policemen, and stationed at the polls to prevent illegal voting. Some had their noses broken, some their faces scarred, and others their heads. When this became known it was characterized as a most unpardonable outrage The feeling was very bitter, and when it became known that Mayor Ditmars was its author some of his best admirers voted against him. At the Hunter's Point poll $5 were paid for single votes in the interest of Ditmars, and at the other polling places the prices varied from a glass of gin to $3. The friends of De Bevoise worked hard, and elected their candidate by a majority of 142. The total vote was 2,546, the largest ever polled in the city.

THE POPE AND THE PRINCE OF WALES.

On Wednesday of last week there occurred in Rome an event which, had it happened a few years ago, would have furnished a sensation to the entire English-speaking world. It is a significant indication of the changed and changing character of the times that the event was comparatively unnoticed. We refer to the formal visit which was paid to the Holy Father, Pope Pius the Ninth, by the heir to the British throne, in company with his young and accomplished Princess. The interview seems to have been most agreeable. The audience granted by the Pope to the illustrious pair was, we are told, long; and the Holy Father desired their Royal Highnesses "to convey to the Queen his thanks for her constant evidence of sympathy." It is added that the Venerable Pontiff—no doubt with a special reference to the national thanksgiving for the restoration to health of the Prince of Wales—praised the British people for their piety. On the same day a visit was paid by the royal couple to Cardinal Antonelli.

We live in a marvellous age. Progressive change is everywhere visible. What changes have taken place within the last quarter of a century. What greater changes will take place in the fifty years that are to follow. Who shall say that the successor of St. Peter, now that he is no longer encumbered with the cares of temporal sovereignty, may not yet succeed in healing the Church's divisions and gathering into one fold all that bear the name of Jesus? Wonderful it certainly would be; but who shall say impossible? One thing is perfectly clear, that religion, as well as race and language, must cease to divide the human family.—N.Y. Herald.

Dean Stanley, in a sermon the other day, remarked that "the universities of Roman Catholic Italy and Spain had faded away; but those of Protestant Germany, Holland, Scotland, and England, still flourished and abounded."

THE FIRST EPISCOPAL ELECTION OF THE IRISH CHURCH.

The first episcopal election under the new circumstances of the Irish Church has been held to supply the vacancy in the see of Cashel caused by the lamented death of the Rt. Rev. Dr. Daly. The attendance of members of the synod was so large as to show how deep and earnest an interest is taken by the members of the Church of Ireland in the choice of her overseers. Hardly any member of the synod not incapacitated by sickness was absent, and not less than 350 of clergy and laity attended. The synod, which was presided over by the Archbishop of Dublin, with Judge Harrison as his assessor, was held in St. Mary's Church, Clonmel. There were four candidates for the important post—the Deans of Limerick and Cashel, the Archdeacon of Waterford, and the Rev. Dr. Bell.

The first poll gave the following result:—The Dean of Limerick—clergy, 54; laity, 111: Rev. Dr. Bell—clergy, 47; laity, 65: the Archdeacon of Waterford—clergy, 34; laity, 56: the Dean of Cashel—clergy, 30; laity, 77.

The other polls were subsequently taken, each eliminating one of the candidates who had not the requisite number of votes. The final poll was:—The Dean of Limerick—clergy of Cashel synod, 26; laity, 57: Waterford synod—clergy, 34; laity, 59.

The Dean of Limerick, having the requisite majority of two-thirds of each order present and voting, was declared by the Archbishop the selected of the synod.

"There are very few Irish Churchmen (says the Morning Mail) who will not rejoice in this result, for two reasons—the first being the circumstance that the initial test of the new principle of election has brought no discredit upon it; and the second, that there has been chosen a divine who may be regarded as typical of the evangelical sentiment and zeal of the largest section of the clergy. The Dean of Limerick is an addition to the episcopal bench, enhancing its claims upon the confidence and affection of the public, and guaranteeing the continuance of the Church in the old paths of Protestant truth and effort."

Dr. WHEELER'S Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya.

THERE is no diseased condition of the body in which Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya, may not be used with positive benefit. Being a Chemical Food and Nutritive Tonic, it acts physiologically in the same manner as our diet. It perfects Digestion, Assimilation, and the formation of healthy blood. It sustains the vital force by supplying the waste constantly going on, of nerve and muscle, as the result of mental and physical exertion, enabling mind and body to undergo great labour without fatigue. Its action in building up constitutions broken down with Wasting Chronic Diseases, by fast living and bad habits, is truly extraordinary, its effect being immediate in energizing all the organs of the body. Phosphates being absolutely essential to cell formation and the growth of tissues, must for all time be Nature's great restorative and vitalizer.

Sold by all druggists at $1.
