From the Wheatfields

To the Editor of The Advance:

DEAR SIR,—Thanking you for past favor for the use of your valuable columns, I come again, with your permission, to send a few notes to many friends who have requested me to write to them. I can reach so many more through the medium of your paper—our paper—I take it this is my best course

The harvest here in Assiniboia, then, is past. Some of the farmers are threshing from the stook, while some have stacked on the field. The crop on the whole is an excellent one, yet the truth is, not six miles from here, west, are fields through which I passed and examined the wheat, which was frozen so that the grain was simply chicken fed. Not all, not everybody, in all their crop had an excellent yield of No. 1 hard by any means, yet on the whole country's average it was all that could be desired.

We were invited to help a man cut a 150 acre field of wheat, and so one morning we started with the binder and a good fresh team of three horses, and our instructions were to go right round the field—follow the wheat and we would return to the starting point; so we started in high spirits and travelled on and on, our new Massey machine clicking off the bountious sheaves in a musical way, whilst in contemplation of the scene we became lost in reverie. Suddenly we stopped and looking round began to wonder if we were not trespassing on some other person's farm, the way seemed so long. We looked ahead anxiously for the turn. None in sight. Follow the wheat? Goodness, has he started us for British Columbia? And he forgot to mention where we would stop over night! Follow the wheat rings in our ear, so on we go, and just in one hour we are back at the starting point. Field, did I say; it's a whole county! Well, such are many of the blocks of wheat here. The threshing operations are very interesting indeed. Out on a great bed of stooks, one or two miles away, you see an engine and thresher at work with ten or twelve teams hauling from stook to machine, and viewed from a distance what marvelous activity appears. It is like a little army manoeuvering in action. The view holds one spell bound on the principal that distance lends enchantment to the view. Arriving on the spot we find every one living a certain porsion of the busy work to perform and the machine pouring out the wheat at the rate of 20 or 30 or more bushels per acre, keeping a number of teams on the trot hauling to the granaries that have been prepared to receive it. Yet all cannot thresh in this way, and so as one looks abroad the whole land is dotted with huge stacks in every direction. The straw is simply strewn over the ground in the vicinity of the machine by a team of horses and a long pole and afterwards burned. I pause to say, what a pity this straw could not be within reach of Ontario for feed for the herds this coming winter.

Wild animals? Yes, there are some, of course. An instance: While cutting a field of wheat, just ahead of the horses came an animal out of the wheat. The horses stop, some of them snort and appear uneasy. What is it? Our picture book of old helps us. It is a wolf. Then a creepy sensation thrills over one's back Is there a pack just in there? Then the stories we have read loom up. But Tower is not far away. A few whistles and he is on hand. Then we witness one of the liveliest chases it has ever been our privilege to see. But wolf escapes, to the hills in the long run. He was alone. Again, an amusing incident occurred in an oatfield. Young Ontario was stooking oats. A badger, large as an average dog, appeared close at hand and snapped his teeth while his long nose ran up in the air and his eyes sparkled fire as he shook his broad, heavy, fat sides as if saying "Fight!" Up speaks young Ontario from the other side of the stook: "No, Mr. Badger, I decline the engagement. See, hands up. I'm not armed and have light shoes on, while I see you have a double row of sharp pointed ivories. Not sir, not this time. You can go. But you need not hurry. Have a friend who can perhaps accommodate you. I'll call him. Here, Towser!" Badger, afraid of the voice and the vicious bark of Tower coming, scampers off, reaching his den in the ground just in the nick of time to escape Tower.

Wild fowl? Well, I should say there is just at this season. Mr. Editor, I wish you and a few more of my friends who love a little sport with the fowling piece, were here, for we could have some of the rarest sport we ever had. Wild geese, turkeys and ducks by the multitude come morning and evening on the stubble giving opportunity for the clumsy or the expert marksman with gun or rifle, and I tell you, from the sample they are a tasty roast. Just now they are fed on the best of wheat and are as fat as they well can be. Flocks of white turkeys alight on the wheatfield are a most tempting sight. They are large, some of them standing three feet high. Then there are the bronze turkeys, something smaller yet none the less an acceptable roast; and the dark geese, large and stately, but all alert as a fox. There is another class of geese, the waveys—large, white. In flying their motion appears like the waves of the sea and their formation in the air reminds one of Masonic specalities, representations of all the angles you could mention. Yet man, lordly man, is foxier than them all, so behind a wheat stack, under a pile of straw, or from a stook of grain, or from the door of the cabin, rings a sharp report, a spit of fire, a whistling bullet or a shower of heavy shot, and there is a flapping of wings that cannot mount aloft again, and young Ontario's roast goose or turkey is an assured fact. Then two miles from the cabin we could have ducks by the bagfull in a day's shooting amongst the numerous sloughs and water ponds one, two or three feet deep, fringed with long grass tall as a man. These ponds, nestled in the hollows between the knolls up on the Moose mountain, some 100 or 200 feet above the level of the prairie, are of easy access through ravines that slope gradually down to the prairie level. Up on the mountains are lots of the best of granite, grey and brown building stone, also tracts of wood and scrub The poplar wood makes good building logs and firewood, almost as lasting as our Ontario maple. In the woods, out on the prairie and in the stubble we run across covey of the gaudy prairie chicken, which, by the way, makes one of the rarest, tastiest roasts, a dish fit for a king. Yes, if you were here a couple of weeks, Mr. Editor, we would revel in high living, truly. F. T. CARR.

Mr. John Grierson, of Ravenna, sold his orchard this year to an Ottawa buyer for $450. We understand the same party offered Mr. Samuel Goodfellow, near Duncan, $600 for the fruit of his orchard but he refused to accept the offer. The buyer claimed if he could purchase Mr. Goodfellow's orchard he would have the best two orchards in the Beaver valley.—Clarksburg Reflector.

Mr. Richard Smith will remove to Toronto, and W. Smith, liveryman, will move into his residence.

On Tuesday evening last week a few of the people of Flesherton were privileged to listen to one of the most entertaining, instructive and interesting lectures it has ever been our privilege to attend, when Trooper Mulloy gave his experiences in Africa. We say a "few" of the citizens because the gross proceeds only amounted to $13.20, of which sum the library received the princely sum of $5.20. Just why the turnout was so poor we are at a loss to fathom Here was a man about whom the British world is talking and to whom kings and princes have done honor. He comes to Flesherton and a mere handful of citizens turn out, to welcome him. The story of how he lost his eyesight was thrilling in the extreme and his description of the country made very plain the difficulties which British arms have to encounter. Trooper Mulloy is a fine specimen of manhood, a pleasing and entertaining speaker. His quaint Irish wit in describing life in the army kept the hearers laughing throughout the lecture. Those present heard a good thing, and the large number who did not see their way clear to patronize either Mr. Mulloy or the library missed the treat of a lifetime and the privilege of doing honor to a grand specimen of British pluck and build-g courage. At the close of the lecture several loyal ladies were presented to Mr Mulloy.

Harvest Home Services

Harvest Home services were held in the Presbyterian church at Proton Station on Sabbath, Sept 29. The preacher in the afternoon was Rev. W. J. Buchanan of Markdale, who preached an appropriate, powerful and impressive sermon In the evening the Rev. Ivison Wilson, B.A., B.D., of Flesherton, preached an eloquent, able and instructive sermon. The congregation was not so large in the afternoon on account of the inclemency of the weather. In the evening, however, it cleared up and the church was crowded. On the following evening an entertainment was given with tea served in the Orange hall. The church was beautifully decorated by young ladies of the congregation. The walls were decorated with evergreens and over the platform were beautiful mottoes of texts of Scripture with the design of the cross and crown. The letters were formed of leaves and flowers, and in front of the platform was covered with choice flowers and fruits of various kinds. So attractive was the church that one of the speakers from Flesherton said that to see the decoration was worth the journey. The chair was occupied by the pastor, Rev. I. W. Thom. The choir of the Flesherton Methodist church, which was fully represented, in charge of the leader, Mr. Barnhouse, furnished the music. The choir throughout its part of the program maintained its high standard of musical talent. The selections were most suitable and appropriate and executed in a manner which would be difficult to excel outside the city. Several pieces were encored again and again but the performers did not respond. The speakers were Rev. Mr. Hill of Dundalk, and M. K. Richardson, M. P., of Flesherton. Mr. Hill spoke in a very happy, humorous strain, and was loudly applauded from the audience. Mr. Richardson, who is no stranger to platform speaking, said he was not a pessimist. While fully recognizing the work done by the church in the past he expected to see far greater things done by her in the future. He was glad, as a layman, to have the privilege to give some advice to the ministers. They had things all their own way and he would like sometimes when they are preaching and exhorting to have the opportunity of asking questions. He considered the best kind of preaching was that which sent the people away dissatisfied with themselves, which would lead to self examination and create a desire to live up to a higher christian standard. He was also gratified to see the decided progress in the spirit of unity that prevailed throughout the various denominations as exemplified on the platform where he observed Church of England, Methodist and Presbyterian sitting side by side, endeavoring to forward the grand work of the church of God. Votes of thanks were given choir and speakers, and the meeting closed with the National Anthem.
