Superiority of Canadian Flour

Canadian flour of the best sort contains by actual analysis about one tenth more of albuminoids than the best quality of Hungarian flour, and the albuminoids or gluten being more tenacious yield a dough which rises better and holds its position in the baked loaf. Let the press proclaim this, and the news will be followed by a demand for Canadian flour in the old country, where people know a good thing when they see it and will have the best that can be procured.

For some time past Canadian flour has been steadily gaining ground in the European markets, and it is better known as flour from which bakers can make not only the best quality of bread but also the largest quantity per barrel. The English bakers make up their sponge from seven or eight brands of flour, because this enables them to have a continuity of quality in the event of any single brand failing in the market. Three tests made by first class English bakers in London with Canadian flour gave the following results. Each having 100 pounds of flour, they obtained in the first instance 146 pounds of bread, 152 pounds of bread in the second, and 151 pounds of bread in the third case. Each test was made with strong Canadian flour. It is noteworthy that adulteration of Canadian flour by Indian corn flour, or other cheaper and inferior substances, is entirely unknown. For sweetness, whiteness and strength Canadian flour is unsurpassed.

To meet the increased demand in England for hard wheats to mix with the home grown and softer wheats, Mr. E. T. Shust, M. A., of the Central experimental farm at Ottawa, made a comparative examination between Canadian best patents and the best grades of Hungarian flours. The foreign samples had been procured by the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture. The result of these experiments proved the superiority of the Canadian flour for bread making purposes. The percentages of albuminoids or protein, the most important part from a nutritive stand point, were: Canadian, best patents, 12.59 per cent; Hungarian, best grade, 11.27 per cent. The determination of gluten, both wet and dry, was also in favor of Canadian flour, namely: Canadian, best patents, wet gluten, 34.23, dry gluten, 12.33; Hungarian, best grade, wet gluten, 26.17; dry gluten, 9.79.

Clover seed can be sown in all the eastern provinces of Canada and in the coast climate of British Columbia to advantage with all cereal crops, without lessening the grain crop for the current year, for after the grain is cut the clover grows luxuriantly, acting as a catch crop during the latter part of the season.

Green clover turned under is specially valuable to the land, because while growing it absorbs large quantities of nitrogen from the air, and which is stored up in its tissues. A heavy mat of growth is produced by the autumn, which, when ploughed under, adds considerably to the available nitrogen in the soil, as well as to the store of humus. The proportion of nitrogen thus added to the land is equal to that obtained from a dressing of ten tons of barnyard manure to the acre. Considerable supplies of potash, phosphoric acid, and lime are also taken up by the clover plant during its growth, a part of which is gathered from depths in the soil not reached by some other farm crops. Tests year after year with wheat, oats barley and potatoes confirm the value of this method of adding to the fertility of the soil.

In preparing the land for crops in the eastern provinces the advantages arising from fall plowing have been proved. The exposure of the soil to the influence of frost, sunlight and air is beneficial. Spring work is materially advanced and crops can be got in earlier by this practice. Summer-fallowing a part of the land each year has been found of great advantage on the north-west plains. This conserves moisture, destroys weeds, and brings the farmer much larger crops. The yield of wheat on land that has been summer fallowed will average fully one-third more than land that has been prepared by only fall or spring plowing.

The tests carried on at the Experimental Farm for ten years have fully demonstrated that increased crops result from early sowing. Sowing at the earliest possible time and then sowing a second series a week later, then four lots at intervals of a further week each, has shown that the best crops have been had from the second sowings made just one week after it was possible to sow seed. Beyond this delay in sowing has resulted in loss which has been more serious as the delay has been greater. The average of the ten years' experience shows that with wheat a delay of one week beyond the period mentioned has entailed a loss of over 30 per cent., two weeks 40 per cent., three weeks nearly 50 per cent, and four weeks 56 per cent. of the crop.

Farmers should avail themselves of the opportunity of sending any doubtful samples of grain and other seeds to the Experimental Farm to be tested for their vitality. By this means any injury to the vitality of grain from unfavorable weather during harvest may be promptly detected and the extent of the injury ascertained. Samples weighing about one ounce may be sent to the Central experimental farm at Ottawa free through the mail. These samples are tested and reported on free of charge, and their percentage of vitality can usually be determined within a fortnight after they are received.

A Trip to England.

BY JOHN COULTHARD.

Letter No. 4.

When I left Dalton, I got on a new car, third class, and I quite good as first class here, but built in a different style. It had a passage on one side the whole length with compartments the same as the old kind. They were the width of the passage shorter, therefore the car would not hold so many people. They went much faster than they did when I left Liverpool and did not stop at every station. They have station houses on both sides of the tracks and have subways under the track or overhead. People are not allowed to cross the track any other way. You get on the train from one side to go east and on the other to go west, or which ever way you are going. You have to change coming back. Most of the stations are very nicely fixed up with flower beds and evergreen shrubs, and trees of different kinds, and well kept. They collect the tickets at the station where you get off. As a general thing there is just one way out from the station. Such places as Liverpool, they collect the tickets at the last station they stop at. They can only collect or inspect and punch tickets when the train is stopped. I stayed a week in Liverpool. I visited the museum, which is worth going to see, and the art galery is something grand. I could look a week at that. I was also in the Grand Library and reading room attached, where are kept all the newspapers (some hundreds of them.) There are some very fine parks.

I went across to Birkenhead and to Port Sunlight, where the first Sunlight Soap factory was started on a small scale fourteen years ago. There was nothing to attract the notice of the passerby but the cattle grazing in the fields. To-day these fields, to the extent of 220 acres, comprise the Port Sunlight estate and are covered with well planned factories, docks, railways and workers' dwellings, as well as a number of buildings for the religious, educational and social well being of its inhabitants. The works possess the double advantage of lying in close proximity to the Birkenhead and Chester Line of railway. I am told that during the summer season thousands of visitors from every corner of the globe come to inspect the unique works and village, all bent on enjoying the privilege, freely granted, of spending a couple of hours in the world-famous works and village of Lever Bros. Limited. As we were passing along Greendale road, one of the many handsome roadways the village possesses, we at once catch a glimse of huge chimney stacks belonging to the works. We note the trim kept road, tree bordered, like so many avenues. We see the charming old fashioned cottages. We see the sloping, shrub dry-dotted lawns. At length, after walking three-quarter of a mile, we find ourselves in front of the handsome entrance to the general office. On passing through we enter an imposing vestibule where a courteous gentleman places us in charge of a guide who into conduct us through the works. Before commencing our tour of inspection we are told that the works provide employment for 3000 work people on the spot, in addition to several hundreds in the branch offices and on the agents staffs throughout the United Kingdom. It is stated that upwards of 10,000 people, inclusive of employees' wives and children, are dependent on Lever Bros. Limited. After inscribing our names on the visitor's book we pass through the east wing of the general office, where a large number of clerks are engaged in the business of the day. We are informed that upwards of one hundred typewriting machines are being employed. Leaving the offices we pass along a corridor and are ushered into the printing room. The whirling sound of the rapidly revolving machinery clearly indicates what is being done in this vast workshop. Letterpress printing plant may be seen, from the hand press to the latest and most improved machine, the motive power being electricity. They publish a monthly magazine called "Progress," for circulation among the members of the staff. We next find ourselves in the bookbinding department, which is situated in galleries around the printing room. The book sewing machines are capable of sewing 420,000 sections per day, equal to 100,000 copies of a book of 128 pages in thickness. We go through the cardbox room. Here the card boxes, received in sheets from the printing department, are punched out and wire stitched at an enormous rate. As we pass along the picture and showcard framing and mounting department on our left, we come to the wood box factory. The machines here are of a surprising nature. The wood is imported from Norway in the required sizes. To see the boxes made is a never-to-be-forgotten sight. The rapidity with which they turn them out may be imagined when it is known that with the aid of these wonderful machines 20,000 boxes are turned out each day. Retracing our steps to No. 1 soapery, we see tier upon tier of boxes of Sunlight, Lifebuoy and other soaps. The tower surmounting No. 1 soapery is our next point. We ascend several flights or steps and come out on a velvedere, where a most pleasing view of the whole village of Port Sunlight is obtained. Coming down again we enter the part where the soap boiling is carried on. In this room there are 54 huge pans and 30 in No. 2 soapery. Each pan is fourteen feet deep and capable of holding sixty tons of liquid soap. It is a great sight to see the bubbling and foaming elements in each unity. Space forbids us explaining any more of the inside works. The village of Port Sunlight consists entirely of work peoples' dwellings, together with the most complete system of religious, educational and social institutions, and is the finest community in the world, for health and comfort of its inhabitants is provided and everything that is done is done well. There are upwards of 600 houses, built mostly in blocks, from two to seven houses in a block, and no two blocks are alike in style, and every cottage has a bathroom. The cottages comprise living room, scullery, three bedrooms and bath room. The school buildings are beautifully situated in the very heart of the village with a total of 628 pupils. The schools are free.

On the 6th of March we left Liverpool and all went nicely until after we left Derry, Ireland, and we all got rather unruly. For four days I was more or less sea sick, and there were a great many like me. We saw a beautiful rainbow from one horizon to the other. The weather then began to be more favorable and on the ninth day we sighted Halifax, a most lovely day. We got into harbor about 4 p. m., and put off a good deal of freight and half the passengers here. We left again about 10 p.m., for St. John. Next morning was beautiful sailing along the coast of Nova Scotia and crossing the bay to St. John, where we arrived at 6.30 p.m. We had to stay on board till next morning. We then went to the new immigrant shed, where we were placed in a nice large room to await our train. There was a ticket office in the building where we had to change our tickets. One man examined our ticket and inquired what country were from and he found that a great many of us were visitors on our way home and marked us as that in his book, with $30 to the end of it. It seems that every immigrant should have some money with him. We passed from him to the ticket agent, who gave us our necessary tickets to travel to our destination. We left at 6. p. m. on the train for Montreal, but only went 25 miles until we had to stop and did not move all night. A freshet washed out the roadbed so we could not pass. In the morning we were taken back and remained in St. John until 6 p.m. when we made another start No stoppages after that. We arived in Montreal 3 p. m. next day and left again at 10 p. m. Arrived in Toronto at 7.30 p.m. and two days after arrived at home.

Progressive Store News

Week after week we use the columns of this paper for giving you store news; telling you about new goods, latest styles, special values, etc. It pays us to keep you posted. Usually the prices quoted are as low as any you see often times better. Buying goods in large quantities gets us the very lowest quotations. The large business we do each season puts us in a position where we can sell our goods at a closer margin of profit than if we did a small business. STOP A MINUTE!—look the thing square in the face; common sense will tell you that what we say is only right. It isn't possible for any store to own goods in the regular way for less than we, and what we know, we know; no store can sell goods in the regular way at a closer margin of profit than we do.

The prices quoted below are only a few of many good values we have on sale this week:
